J. was appointed fire chief by by Belleville, last night at meeting of the city coun- Gerald Vance was made deputy new position, which will help organization of the fire depart- also an efficient force. The ap- ment of the fire chief has been a contentious question for some months any arguments for and against the vote was taken. All was tran- in the hour of the meeting. The matter was decided by council- and the by-law appointing and deputy chief was passed attempting to have the matter and Ald. George O. Hoe, Ald. Thrasher left the council chamber. It is understood the the opposition on the appoint- of the chief stood eight for Mr. and three for Mr. Vance and one Mr. J. Canning. For the deputy Mr. Vance was static for Victor

After the by-law appointing the two gentlemen to their respective positions, Mayor Reid before the council chamber. Speaking to Chief Lynch, Mayor Reid called upon a vote of this nature, you have fortunately appointed to the position the chief fire chief for the city. I want you to understand that I did not support you for this position and I do not object to the passing of the by-law, because you have been appointed you are a servant of the city, the same as myself, and I will give you my loyal support and I will do everything I can to support the same from you. It would be well for you to remember that you are not to use your position to the detriment of the city, but to the benefit of the city. I want you to understand that I will not support you for any favoritism. I do not want any more gossip or street talk than there has been during the past few months. You have responsibilities placed upon you by the appointment position in the city. All the men of the city are to be treated alike. You are considerable property in your hands. It is up to you to prove yourself worthy of the trust and if you are loyal to the city, and do your duty, I am sure the council will be loyal to you. Chief Lynch, Mayor Reid, on behalf of the council, and I know, who are present, I do not think there will be any objection to the appointment of Deputy Chief Vance."

O WITHOUT KRUSCHEN

Traveller's Tale

"KRUSCHEN KNOWN THE WORLD OVER!"

Read this romantic story of a Canadian "globe trotter" who, wherever she went, found Kruschen Salts on the breakfast table. In the backwoods of the Australian Bush, in New Zealand, in the Fiji Islands, they all take their "daily dose-ful." What further proof could be asked of the wonderful efficacy of Kruschen ?

Rivercourt,
Toronto, 6, Ont.

"I feel I must write you of your wonderful Kruschen Salts. I have used them for 4 years now, and I would not be without a bottle in the house for worlds. I also give them to my three children, ages 3, 4, and 9 years.

"In the first place I was away in the backwoods in Western Australia (the bush) and I went to the doctor there and complained of my kidneys and he advised Kruschen and the story in the village sold it. I was surprised. We were 200 miles up country and got practically all the settlers there had their Kruschen on their breakfast table. From there I came to Canada via New Zealand and Fiji Islands and I saw your Kruschen advertised. It is known the world over."

(Mrs.) F. Bowr.

The secret of Kruschen's success is because, being a combination of six salts, it attends to all the needs of the system—of stomach, liver, kidneys, nerves, blood and brain. Start on Kruschen this morning—show you here how you can make a trial at our expense.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

If you have never tried Kruschen—try it now at our expense. We have distributed a great many special "GIANT" packages which make it easy for you to prove our claim for yourself. Ask your druggist for the new "Giant" size bottle, package. It contains a supply of our regular 75c bottles (together with a separate trial bottle—the finest for short use). Open the trial bottle first, put it to the test, and then, if not entirely convinced that Kruschen does everything we claim it to do, return the 75c bottle with the empty one. Take it back. Your druggist is authorized to return your 75c immediately and without question. You have tried Kruschen at our expense. Ask for the "Giant" package containing both bottles. Gerald Vance is Deputy Chief

Deputy Chief Vance was then brought in the council chamber and Mayor Reid addressed the new incumbent of the position in practically the same strain as the new fire chief. "Yours is a responsible position for when the chief is not present you will be in full charge and the council expects you to treat the men with respect and not to listen to any gossip and street talk, such as has been going on around since the death of the late fire chief. You are a young man and have a long future before you. Always remember you are responsible to this council in all your actions and the first misdemeanor will be immediately checked, Deputy Chief Vance thanked the members for the honor conferred upon him and promised to give his best service to the fire department and the city. Deputy Chief Vance has been a member of the fire department for the past nine years and was born and raised in this city. His hobby is purebred fowl, he having won many cups at the fall fairs and international fairs, with his purebred fowl. The new fire chief will receive $125.00 per month. [81]1/2

Fireman Reinstated

Fireman George Smith, who was recently dismissed from the fire department for a breach of the rules, was given another chance by a recommendation that was passed at the council meeting last night. He will be re-engaged but will have to be on the suspended list for two weeks without pay starting today, before he takes his place within the ranks. Mr. Smith is considered one of the best firemen at the hall and council felt he should be given a chance. Fireman Canning was suspended for two weeks for breach of the rules and to be also returned to the force today. This recommendation was also passed and George Smith be re-instated in the fire department on April 15 next on condition that if the offence of which he was charged should happen again he be dismissed and that the former recommendations passed by this council dismissing him be rescinded and this is without prejudice to the new by-law 2003.

Under the head of motions one was introduced that the chairman of the fire, Alderman Charles L. Hyde, Aids. Fowler, Griffin, Armstrong, Secretary Solicitor A. B. Collins, and the fire chief be elected as a committee to revise by-law 2003 in regards to the regulations of the Belleville Fire Department." This motion was passed unanimously and a very and concise set of rules will be drawn up for guidance of the fire department. Many of the rules in the old constitution are antiquated

Weak Fire Mains

When the matter of paving Dundas Street, between Front and Bridge Street, Superintendent Davis of the Standard Paving Company, it is said by the council, stated that whether or not he received the contract for paving the street, he would repair the gutter and curbing on Charles street a contract performed by that company some years ago. Ald. Hubbard who brough the matter to the council at the time, introduced a motion that the city clerk be instructed to write the Standard Paving Company re the repairing of the gutter and curbing on Charles street, as verbally promised by their representative Mr. Davis before the council of 1929". This motion was passed unanimously In the committee of the whole with Alderman Wollen in the chair, a recommendation was passed "that W. J. Carter be authorized to put the present fire alarm cable connection between the police station and the City Hall clock in proper condition as per his estimate." A test was made of the alarm yesterday by the foreman of fire and the fire chief and it did not work satisfactorily.

Suburban Roads

It was moved that "that the necessary debenture by-law be prepared to take care of the city of Belleville's part of construction on the county suburban roads for the year 1929 amounting to $7,270.00 and that the debenture be drawn on the serial plan for ten years interest at 3 per cent. half yearly". The council were unanimous in favor of a new system of lighting especially on Front street of the city and with this end in view a recommendation was made "that we appoint a committee to inspect and obtain information and report to this council on a standard lighting system for the main thoroughfare of the city, the system to be adopted being a standard, which may be carried on from year to year if the following councils desire to do so, and that the committee be composed of Mayor Reid, Aldermen French, Griffin and Armstrong.

Traffic Officer Needed

A number of enquiries were made by different members of the council when business entered that phase. Alderman Cliff Walker asked the Mayor if it would be possible to have traffic officer in the city for at least three or four months, the same as last year. The traffic is running wild on some of the streets of the city and I think it would be a wise move to have an officer. Mayor Reid stated he would take the matter up with the Police Commission at their next meeting. The same alderman asked the Mayor if the chief would be instructed to write the different clubs with respects to their traffic by-laws and also the system used for parking. Ald. Fowler, who has performed All. Walker there was considerable effort on this matter in the city clerk's office at the present time, Alderman McGinnis inquired if any agreement had been completed between the city and the C.N.R. respecting the bay bridge property. The city clerk stated that the city solicitor and the engineer had been down to the Registry Office in respect to the matter but had not completed their investigation of the title. The council adjourned after a lengthy session.

PROGRESS KEEPS STEPPING ALONG

Waiting for nobody, and those who fail to keep step with the procession, take the sidelines and wonder what it is all about. Printadvance, yesterday Belleville had two daily newspapers and today there is but one and that one serving all the interests of the two newspapers which hitherto filled the field. I am reminded that the Sidelight family has doubled since yesterday and The Lamplighter must be on his best behaviour in order to make a good impression upon the folks who are just entering the Sidelight family. Folks, this is just a little corner where we try to get better acquainted and spread a smile or two a day to help brighten the corner where you are, as well as our own.

Discussion here is informal and no bifalutin' language is used, for it's just among ourselves, and the family of Sidelight readers are invited to contribute suggestions or items of general interest at any time. So to the newcomers to the family circle we say "Welcome," come on in, the water's fine.

BELLEVILLE'S ARTIFICIAL ICE RINK is shutting down for the season, and that's another sure sign of spring, when the artificial ice begins to weaken look out for a warm spell—Easter is just a bit later this year which will give the girls more time to decide about their longer dresses, and the boys time for decision whether they look better in hats or with flowing locks exposed to the summer sun. It has been a middling long and steady winter and computing from the law of averages I wouldn't be surprised if we got a break of nice weather right soon. So cheer up, the best is yet to come.

WILL ROGERS, cowboy humorist, was on the air Sunday night and as usual Will said a lot of things without saying much of anything. Will lives in California, hence had a few good words to say about the sunshine, the fruits and the flowers of that state. Incidentally he said that the day was fine, as usual, in California, only it looked like snow. He said he'd miss his favorite preacher, Aimee McPherson, who has left on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land with four weeks stop-over in Paris, one week in Monte Carlo and two days in Palestine. He'll preach in Paris is a good preparation to gase upon the Dead Sea, said Will, but a week in Monte Carlo is liable to ruin you. Will Rogers also pick occasion jo say that Amos and Andy were giving the nation good, clean entertainment, and that those two were about all kinds of fun for their clean and clever patter. As one star to another that's a tribute which Amos and Andy can be proud of.

POOR ADVICE VERY KEEN

An advertiser stated the other day that incomplete knowledge and poor advice are the source of much trouble in the motor world.

MACK ROBERTSON GAVE ADDRESS AT Y'S MEN'S CLUB

Described Trip to West Indies, Panama and South America

Mr. Mackenzie Robertson, proprietor of a chain of Creameries in Hastings and the adjoining counties, was the speaker at the weekly meeting of the Y's Men's club held in the association building on Campbell Street last night. Mr. Robertson gave a most comprehensive and illuminating talk on a trip which he and his wife took recently. He took the members down to New York when they boarded a steamer bound for the Bahama Islands. He described the voyage minutely touching on the weather conditions and other points of interest. Arriving at the Bahamas which are a part of the West Indies, he observed the sights which presented themselves. Vessels smuggling into the United States has become an industry in this country and enormous quantities are landed nightly under the cover of darkness on the Florida shore which is not many miles distant," he said. "The soil is decidedly poor, is composed chiefly of rocks and sand, and is not at all suitable for farming. The farmers are all negroes and they find their property and crops constantly menaced by the tornados and hurricanes. The Bahamas are noted in the production of tropical fruits including bananas, oranges and grape fruit," he noted. Mr. Robertson stated that the island is becoming famous as a great tourist resort and a playground for Canadian and American visitors. It is an orderly place owing to the fact that British rule prevails. He described some of the points of curiosity including "Dirty Dick's Hotel" is an old-fashioned saloon with all its accoutrements.

An Independent Country.

"Cuba, an independent state is about as big as Newfoundland and is self governed," he said. "The Cubans are progressing in a splendid way and a five hundred mile highway has recently been laid across the continent.

Haiti is composed of two districts republics, Haiti and San Domingo and United States marines are stationed at this place to prevent possible outbreaks."

The speaker then pictured the island of Jamaica a beautiful spot in the British West Indies. "Jamaica is governed practically the same as Canada with a Governor General and a Legislature which is controlled entirely by the whites." He spoke of the luxuriant tropical growth that exists here. Bananas form one of their principal for export and twenty one million bunches are imported by the United States annually from Jamaica. Cocoanuts, sugar, and spices are grown in abundance and shipped to all parts of the world. There are no windows in the houses due to the tropical climate which remains practically the same the year round.

He touched briefly on the characteristics of the people and noted that the women do most of the work, particularly in the nature of road building while the men, a shiftless lot live a life of ease and comfort.

In concluding his address Mr. Robertson spoke of the delights in the the train trip along the Panama Canal, the interesting points in Panama City which is destined to become a great centre and the splendid sights in Caracas, the Capital of Venezuela Trinidad and the Bermudas.

Joe Shorit conveyed thanks of the club to Mr. Robertson and his remarks were augmented by Bob Spencer, President of the club. During the evening the Oshkosh family rendered several numbers.

Tanlac Ends Another Case of Rheumatism and Stomach Troubles—Hotel Man Benefits This Time

Ending the suffering of 10 years in just a few weeks is going some but that's just an example of how quickly Tanlac works in stubborn cases that never yield to other remedies.

No wonder so many local people are so enthusiastic about Tanlac—the wonder local drugstists are loud in praise of this medicine. Read for instance what Mr. J. L. Kline says: "For 10 years have had stomach trouble, Rheumatism also of mornings, stiff and sore all over, mostly in back and shoulders. A good powerful medicine was needed to fix me up and Tanlac proved to be all of that. From it I got relief from all troubles, stomach and rheumatism. My digestion now is just about 100% good. No more pain or distress, eat good, sleep as good as I eat, pain, stiffness, soreness all gone. Rheumatism in back and shoulders wiped out. I have tried out lots of medicine but Tanlac gave me results. That's the story of Tanlac in a nutshell—it gives results and gives them quick, for every herb, buck and root is a real medicine. Many 'patent medicines' make glowing promises that may fool you into buying them, but remember Tanlac is a real medicine that backs its claims with a guarantee. At all druggists. Accept no substitute.

Huntingdon West

WEST HUNTINGDON—The Young People of Madoc staged their play at Rawdon on Wednesday for the fourteenth time this winter. This ends up the winter's work. Several places have been turned down as the cas is really tired but certainly has put in a splendid winter. The young people are to be praised very much indeed for their strenuous efforts through snow banks, mud and very bad roads but are none in worse though at times on edge but but were doing it in the trend of the Master who said go work in my vineyard while yet it is day. The night cometh when no man can work. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Truesdell certainly have a great force for their never tiring efforts to the benefit of the young as well as for the church work. IN THE ROUGH

It was a hot, sultry season in the courts and the judge was thinking of other than judicial thoughts.

Finally the lawyer said: "He claims his wife was intractable, your Honor, so he beat her into subjection with a golf club."

"How many strokes?" asked the judge, absently.—Boston Transcript.

RADIO FANS CORNER.....Sec. C4

How things are looking better aren't they? Last night's reception was just about to my liking. Any voices to the contrary? Good we all agree on that subject then.

Every time the boys try to write a letter it generally has to be rewritten or eventually ends up in "pieces" as Andy's did last night. If I ever get a letter from them before me my first move would be to call an interpreter. Had a lot of fun out of their antics last night though didn't we?

High spots from the "Mikado" will be heard to-night over WABC and chain at 7 o'clock and they will be played by Bernhard Levitow and his Commodore Ensemble. Selections on thesprogram also include Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2" and Schubert's "Minuette" from "E Flat symphony."

The Savannah Liners present as their feature number to-night "The Wooden Shoe Dance" a typical song of the land of the dikes from the suite "In Holland" by Christian Kriens. The program goes on the air over WJZ at 8.15.

Happy Wonder Bakers in their program tonight at 9.30 present the song that was so popular in the days of leg o' mutton sleeves "A Bicycle Built for Two", Jack Parker tenor will sing it for us.

Coon-Sanders orchestra is on the air tonight fans from WEAF at 8.30 and standing out from a background of modern dance music we'll hear the ever popular "On the Road to Mandalay."

Rittio Keith Orpheum boy tonight too don't forget, Fannie Brice and Hal Skelly are two of the headliners also Miss Helen Morgan, the sweet little blues singer. Many more are going to be on this program but listen in and hear for yourself, WEAF at 10.30.

ALLIANCE CONVENTION

The Christian and Missionary Alliance are holding their annual missionary convention on Thursday, Friday and Sunday next in the assembly room of the local Y.M.C.A., Campbell street. The meetings will be addressed by Rev. J. A. MacMillan, superintendent in the Philippine Island Mission. The Rev. J. A. MacMillan served in the Christian and Missionary Alliance in Wickow, South China, until 1926, when he was transferred to the Alliance Mission in the Philippine Islands. Another interesting feature of the convention will be the Alliance Male Quartette of Tyrio, Messrs. Dafoe, Swanson and Gibbel. This group of workers have just concluded very interesting meetings at Castleton and Peterboro.

Toronto, April 1.—(CP)—The stock brokerage firm of H. T. Picard and Company, Limited, was adjudged bankrupt Monday and receiving order issued against it by the registrar, Osgoode Hall. Prince Arthur of Connaught, Governor General designate to the Union of South Africa, will be the first member of the Prince's family to visit the Union of South Africa.

It is said the Prince is dressed shorts and a "polaver" sporting socks. His face has been deeply tanned.

He has found enjoyment in the delights of wading flooded rivers with beds of sailing ice-floes, who ... him with awe. The natives are mystified as the prince's easy mastery of the swift currents.

Hon. President—Co. R. O. Kesler.
President—H. Scallon.
First Vice President—W. George.
Second Vice President—A. Newton.

Four girl teams were entered and they are the Empires, the Whoopees, the Peps, the Whoopees, Ciaco and Opticat.

It was decided that any protest must be accompanied by $5, not only by the team entering the protest, but the team disqualified between the teams.

TRENTON BALL FANS ORGANIZE

New Intermediate League To Have Five Teams

Trenton, April 1 (Special)—A meeting of the baseball enthusiasts of this district will be held here tonight in the C.P.R. Freight Office at eight o'clock, at which it is expected final organization will be made for the new Intermediate O.B.A.A.A. baseball league. The known as the Bay of Quinte Baseball League. Representatives are expected here from Point Anne, Corbyville, Belleville and Picton, as well as the Trenton entry. R. A. Elliott, of Deseronto, District convenor, will also be on hand.

On The Sport Trail

Congratulations are extended to the Y's Men basketball team for the splendid showing they made in the finals against the Echoes of Niagara Falls. The locals met one of the strongest intermediate teams ever collected and it is rumored the Echoes will contest a senior company next year which makes the locals better than an average intermediate squad. The Niagara Falls team had too much system for the locals and their chances were not helped when Harold Buck received a badly sprained ankle in the first part of the game and had to retire from the contest. The misfortune placed the team to an extent and there is a probability that the score would have been closer had Buck stayed in the game. This is the first year that Belleville has worked their way to the finals and next year it will be back again after the title.

March is stepping out of the picture in a lamb-like attitude and soon the sports pertaining to the season will be in full swing. The golf devotees are preparing for a busy campaign and today Cecil Mitchell, pro at the Belleville Golf Club, will open his club making comprehensive preparation for a busy season. The Belleville Golf Club has progressed under the able guidance of a strong executive and more improvements are promised. Many of the holes are to be improved and new greens are to be added that will greatly enhance the beauty of the course. It is expected that a large number of new players will make application for membership in the club. The course will be opened for play in a few days, the course being nearly dry and then the little white balls will be scooting hither and thither.

Belleville, for many years has been the home of Canada's greatest source of the best in training and this city is getting remarkable success on distance tracks. The home colony is preparing for another big season and both these in charge are keeping their charges, keeping them up for the hard work ahead. Bill Smith is preparing two colts for the stake events and each show some promising trotters. These were both sired by Bobby Patch, their dam by Carmen Mac, both parents having fine courage and a great flight of speed. Smith and Patch will introduce a couple of new colts to the face. They are colts by Lakeo Direct, by Lakeo, the sire that good colt Dolly Patch, remembered by many in winning a seven heat race from Lady Grey of Ontario at the old fair grounds. Races will be held here on June 3 and the three days of the fair. It looks like a big year.

MAUR. ORCUTT LEADS BIG FIELD

Miss Hicks is Second and Miss Collett Third at Pinehurst

Pinehurst, N. C. April 1—Miss Maureen Orcutt, hard-driving Haworth, N. J., star, stroked her way over the hilly No. 3 Pinehurst Country Club course yesterday to show a pair of Texas belles other 113 women in be qualifying round of the North and South women's amateur golf tournament. She played consistently, banging out a 90 and 93 for an 83 on the 18-hole trip, while her nearest competitor, Miss Helen Hicks, of Newark, L.I., picked up an 81 over the same route.

Miss Glenna Collett, national champion and last year's winner of the North and South title, found the second nine difficult, and after making a 38 on the quigsly jaunt was forced to take the same route home. Her 82 was good for third position however.

The others were bunched closely behind her and it was necessary to shoot a 97—97—97 to yield a place of the four scoring 90 shall be admitted to the select championship flight.

Miss Honor Bright, Niagara Falls, N.Y., and Miss Helen Walker of New York were beaten in the play-off by Mrs. John Farnum, of Chicago, and Mrs. J. M. Haynes.

One of the day's surprises was the fact that Miss Martha Parker, of New York, former New Jersey champion and one of the favored players failed to qualify. Her 93 left her in the second division.

MISS MITCHELL TAKES TITLE

Kingston, April 1.—Miss Caroline Mitchell won the ladies' single championship of the Kingston Badminton Club when she defeated Miss E. Bauld in the finals by 11-8, 11-4. The games proved highly interesting and were productive of splendid badminton.

Heat them better at less cost with Iron Fireman

Because our own homes and business institutions, many of us feel an interest in, or responsibility for the welfare of several other buildings, homes, institutions or plants of those who, for one reason or another, are inclined to lean upon us.

Many business men are listing every home or building for which they feel directly or indirectly responsible, and are asking Iron Fireman engineers to check up and report back on what Iron Fireman would cost . . . what it would save . . . and what improvements in heating conditions it could be expected to make in each individual case.

Iron Fireman is made in sizes to do any firing job from the small home heating plant to a plant requiring 200 boiler horsepower. It is sold and serviced by a national organization of engineers and dealers. Users are receiving a firing service that is reliable and economical that Iron Fireman, in industrial size, on an average, writes itself off the books in 30 months on fuel cost savings alone.

"Y" Alleys

The new Intermediate Men's League started nicely last night when the Super Five and the Y's Men met and the results were quite satisfactory. The two games were real close and went to the Super Five by 20 pins. The Y's Men's bowling, strong to take the last game and the total of 974 single strokes. Palmer 171, Torrance 163, Oster 220, B. Currie 179 and Beasley 194. Miller 204, Stratton 161 and Shortt 161,N. Edwards 168, 152.

Following this party consisting of a supper and a theatre party at The Belle the Moosehearts completed a real nice evening by defeating the Freshies in a Ladies' League game. The result was Freshies 4 points, Moose 0. Hi singles, Peg. Burke 198, 200, 168, Graham 167, Pat Burke 166, C. Summers 168, 176, M. Kelleher 202, L. Glover 178, H. Lang man 168, 166.

Freshies deserve special mention in this game. Peg. Burke's 614 for three string, and three games over 900 is mighty fine trundling each, the league or for most girls' teams, particularly as this is the first year bowling for this team.

Day's prize winners were, Miss McPherson, Wrightmeyer and White.

VROOMAN GOES TO STRATFORD

Kitchener, April 1—Jack Vrooman one of the best prospects, if not the best, on the Kitchener-Waterloo hockey team this year, left for Stratford where he will reside. Both Stratford and Niagara Falls were anxious to land the Kitchener star, who has been out of work for some time. He has secured a position in the Classic City. Vrooman will be greatly missed by the junior club.

SOUL OF TACT

A well known speaker lectured to the members of a literary society, and at the end of his address the secretary approached him with a check. This he politely refused, saying that it might be devoted to some charitable purpose.

"Would you mind," asked the secretary, "if we add it to our special funds?"

"Not at all," said the speaker. "What is the special fund for?"

"It is to enable us to get better lecturers next year."

SILK FROM THE AIR

London.—It might be possible before long to take cellulose, the raw material from which paper, artificial silk, and other things are made, directly from the air. That's the prediction of Dr. Herbert Levinstein, president of the Society of Chemical Industry. Since coal and cellulose come from the same chemical unity of matter, since the former has been produced synthetically from the air, the doctor believes the latter can also.

BOY OF 4 SAVES GIRL 18

Woonsocket, R. I. — Raymond Pontaine, only 4 years old, saved the life of 18-year-old girl.

The lad stopped for a neighborly call at the home of his close friend, where Janette Forget lived, but the most charming sound of Janette talking about the kitchen, preparing dinner for her father and brother, was lacking. Janette lay upon the floor in the hall. The odor of gas was in the air.

The 4-year-old hurried upstairs to his mother and she called the police. They brought an ambulance. At the hospital physicians said that Janette would recover. They learned that a kettle of soup had boiled over, extinguishing the gas flame.

FIRST FACTORY OPENS

The first cheese factory to open in Prince Edward County this season started operations today at Bloomfield. This is an unusually early opening and the other factories will doubtless follow suit and start production within the next few weeks.

APRIL SHOWERS

"April Showers Bring May! owers." This little April rhyme occurred to many a Belleville optimist today, when the first day of the month brought a steady downpour of rain. The cold weather seems to have at last definitely disappeared and mild springlike weather has taken its place since Sunday, the first day this year that motorists have enjoyed an outing without the necessity of wearing heavy coats. The alluring aroma of spring is in the air and many a Belleville citizen has been caught napping by the sudden change. Everywhere the sight of some nonspecting friend caught them in some unsuspecting trap, for today is "April Fools' day, and woe to the person who did not investigate every suspicious tip, given by their fun-loving friends.

PREPARE FOR SEEDING

WILL COMMENCE PLAY SHORTLY

Mr. Bryson C. Donnan, president of the Belleville Golf Club, announced today that play will begin at the popular east end course within a few days as soon as weather permits. Several changes in lay out of the course are proposed this year which include the lengthening of several holes. MILITARY SOFTBALL

A softball team from the Argyll Light Infantry will journey to Kingston on Friday night to engage a team from the Prince of Wales Regiment. The military nines have had many lively tussles in indoor softball and the meeting the end of the week will be no exception. The local squad have a fine team lined up and they have been practising for sometime. A return game will be played here. Such sport programs do much to foster the commanding spirit and promote the comradeship that was prevident in War days.

BASKETBALL CROWN

The unofficial championship of Central Ontario in Col'egiate basketball will be decided tonight at the Collegiate Institute when the local basketeers lineup against the Peterboro Collegiate Institute squad. The Peterboro Collegiate negligently omitted to enter the O.A.B.A. playdowns but were successful in defeating Lindsay and Cobourg Collegiates, who put out Port Hope and Bowmanville. Belleville were ordered to play Pickering, while Peterboro were refused admission to the series. The game tonight will decide the championship of Central Ontario and the return game will be played in Peterboro in the near future. Although the locals have had a stern-ly successful season most of the boys playing lacrosse and basketball, they have been practising faithfully and will give a good account of themselves against a record that is reputed to be fast and clever.

CASES REMANDED

Owing to the absence of Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan from the city today two cases down on decision in the police court were remanded. William J. Howard of Point Anne, was charged with beating his wife and occasioning actual bodily harm. He elected summary trial but was not asked to plead to the charge. This case will be heard on Thursday morning. Mr. C. A. Payne is acting for the wife and her parents in the case and H. D. Poulton, K.C., for the accused. Another case involving a young man from Point Anne, for a serious offence will laid over for a week, Mr. E. J. Butler, K.C., is acting for the comp'ainant in the action.

FOUND IN FRANKFORD

The car was left in Ketcheson's garage in that village for repairs to a windshield. The man who brought the car was not known by Mr. Ketcheson, who stated that he came from Ottawa and would return for the car in a couple of days. Noticing the story of the stolen car in the Belleville paper, closer investigation was made and Mr. Panter in this city was communicated with and later picked up. The garageman was notified to keep the car and Mr. Panter went for the car today. It is understood the car is in first class condition excepting for the broken windshield.

CHEESE FACTORY SEASON OPENED

Cheesemakers Will Hold Get-Together Meeting

Today will see the annual spring start of one of this district's principal industries, the cheese making industry. J. L. Irwin, dairy product grader for Eastern Ontario, left this city today for Kingston where he will grade the first cheese to be made there after an exceptionally long winter, this is the first occasion when Mr. Irwin's services have been required to grade the savory substance since last fall. He will grade in more than one factory near the Limestone City.

In the territory immediately adjacent to Belleville there are nearly fifty cheese factories, all making the finest cheese that can be procured anywhere in the world. As a matter of true fact, even in England, County of Hastings cheese is considered the best that can be procured and it is brings the highest prices.

Like the creameries it is rumored that cheese factories in central and eastern Ontario are to be linked together in a gigantic combine by British capital. "I have nothing to say to that," J. L. Irwin said to The Ontario Intelligencer today. There is nothing definite so far as I can state, and it is only rumors that combine the factories.

Within the next two weeks the cheese makers in this district, headed by Mr. Irwin, will hold a series of get-together meetings, discussing their problems and getting to cure theiri and "swapping" information.

GOODYEAR MEANS GOOD WEAR

The Cub Reporter Learns His Lesson

The youngest cub sat hunched up over his desk, his tawny hair in wild confusion, his face smudged with the black in, his collar and tie awry — he sat pretending to pore over the evening paper while dull misery surged up through his entire anatomy and laid cold fingers over his heart. Mechanically he turned a page and there, giving up the pretense of reading, rested his weary head on one grimy hand and tried desperately to think how the awful thing had happened.

Mentally he reviewed the hours since the previous morning. He had been on a convention yesterday, and had got the material for the "beat-up" thing with one ear, while he took the report of the convention speaker's address with the other. He remembered he had intended to write the story just as soon as his convention dope was off his hands for the afternoon edition but—what would you? The convention people had been slower than anything in this world, or the next, and when the morning session finished he had found himself with only a scant 30 minutes to dash off all the deliberations of the morning and get it into the hand of the city editor by the skin of his teeth for the afternoon paper.

Well, what had happened then, he pondered. He had headed up his three columns of stuff nicely, filled page 1 which always "went down" a day in advance and he had had just time enough for a chocolate bar lunch if he was to get back to the convention in time to hear the afternoon speaker, who was said to be an unusually good speaker. Well, anyway, he remembered, it was six o'clock in the afternoon when the afternoon session finished and by the time he had his story for the special address done, and his "convention sidelights" for the fight page box all in order, the purge of nature would not longer be denied, and he had taken 20 precious minutes for a steak at his favorite self-serve lunch around the corner.

Certainly there had been no time to write his interview with the old explorer after that. It was a good story and he had wanted to write it. He would never forget the thrill he got when he discovered that the old man sitting so quietly beside him at the convention was the renowned explorer, who had been everywhere and seen everything. He would never forget the triumph he experienced when the old gentleman acquiesced to his request for an interview and offered to give it to him then and there. Yes, he had wanted to write the story all right, but there hadn't been a minute. But if he'd ever dreamed that Banks of the "Journal" had dispersed the old man, too, he'd have sat up all night—but how could he imagine such a thing?

Well, there probably wasn't time to do a line of it, before the last session of the convention. It was past eight by the time he got out of the restaurant, and going to nine fast and furiously when he stumbled into his chair at the reporters' table at the convention; it was 11 before the session was over and it was nearing one o'clock when he covered his typewriter after writing the last "stick" about the dashed conference.

Out for Three Nights

He remembered that as he walked home through the drizzling rain battling the eyes fiercely to keep himself awake—he'd been working for three nights keeping an eye on the deliberations of these miserable delegates — he remembered that he'd promised himself he'd find time to write the story after he gave his baby his bath once over in the morning. He'd have done it, too, but as ill luck would have it he met his most fractious news source just as he left the office at 830 o'clock after clearing his desk of the early morning stuff.

This irritating town source had kept him for what seemed like hours discussing nothing in particular, but as had left he must be polite and then also was leaving he had been given a mile long story about a family reunion, in which many names were involved. Out of the office he had to go and dashed back to the office and in to the city editor in order to find that many of the names had no initials and that many were misspelled. After tedious minutes with the city directory, during which time he answered the telephone several times and uttered terse remarks to various people who felt they must come into the office to give him their news items he got the reunion copy into the city editor's hand.

He might have got down to his interview after he'd cleared his desk of the small items for the second time that morning but just as he opened his notes a lady came in and gave him a story of a musicale held the night before in which she appearing in the concert were prominent. And as he recalled that all hope of getting at the interview had faded from his mind as he glanced over the program.

Musical things were the nightmare of his young life. He loved music, but for the life of him, he never could put it down in words, properly, and since he was at the eleventh hour before press time, confronted with a long program of unusually high musical standard.

Spoed the Big Factor

He had written such pieces for appropriate phrases. The lady had urged him to make a good story of the affair to help further the cause of music in the community and he was a conscientious cub. He tried to avoid the eye of the city editor by busying with him for speed, and then more speed, as he toiled through sentence after sentence of a review of that program. Speed was out of the question if he were going to save all hope of writing his beloved interview fad-ling over the heritage. Now, how he wished he'd headed the city editor and let the musical thing go with a flash. Bitterly he was learning that Speed-speed with a capital S—is the one essential need of a good reporter.

The musical review had gone in on time and, if he did say so himself, it wasn't too half-bad a story; the family reunion with its tricky names got down in time, and the names had initials, and were spelled correctly, but that was nothing to be happy about now. For a great calamity had befallen him, so great a calamity that it blotted out every other thing on its landscape. For Banks of the "Journal" had the story of the musical thing; he had the story of the family reunion with all the names and initials; and besides that, he had the interview with the old explorer. It was here in the "Journal" before him and not one—now his own paper wouldn't want the interview at all, or at least only a line on it. All the wonderful sentences that had been glowing in his mind as he considered the old man's material would now never see the light of day; the splendid display head he had seen over his story in his mind's eye would never be written now; but worse than those incidentals, a hundred times worse than his own disappointment over never being able to handle the gorgeous picturesque story the old man had given him, was the way he had betrayed his paper, who counted on the prize story of the month and by that miserable rag of the Journal. As he reviewed the past few days he couldn't see how any human being could have got in the time to write that story but one human being—Banks of the Journal—had done it.

A strident voice cut into his musings. "How about that flower show story, young fellow? You've had it in the have it by five o'clock and it's 3.30 now." It was the city editor bringing him back out of his trance.

The youngest cub stood up and pushed his unruly hair out his eyes AS he adjusted his hat the city editor spoke again. "The back form by 4.30 o'clock for sure and get the story in shape in a hurry. I'll want you to do a special story tonight for next Saturday's special edition; so speed up, speed."

The youngest cub galvanized into life. Speed he already knew was the city room door he flung over his shoulder, "Speed it is, sir, speed it is."

The youngest cub had learned one of the first lessons of those who live in the charmed circle of the fourth estate.

Speed is exactly the opposite of what the clever people of today think it is."—Alfred Noyes.

proper measurements. Should the stories vary but a thousandth of an inch, it would soon be apparent in the trimmed slugs, which would not fit together properly.

Matrices Distributed

In the meantime, the ink of matrices has been transferred to the upper part of the machine by means of a long arm, called the elevator. The top of each matrix is cut in a V-shape, and the V has combinations of nicks. The combination on each different character is unlike that of any other character. The matrices are passed on a long notched bar, and propelled by means of distributor screws. When the matrix reaches a spit on the bar where the nicks correspond to its cast, the matrix drops into its channel in he magazine.

Taking Proofs

When a story has been finished the linotype operator takes the tray full of slugs to a "dump" and transfers them to long, shallow trays, called "galleys." A man at the dump reads the proper headline over the story, and a proof is taken.

Proofs are given to men whose duty it is to read carefully the story that has been set, and to compare it with the original copy, to see that no mistakenness have been made. The proof reader also is responsible for typographical errors.

When the errors have been marked, the proof is returned to the dump, and the new lines are set. They are inserted by hand in the corresponding banks and the story is ready to go to the forms.

Make-Up

Under supervision of a make-up editor, printers place the stories in iron frames, which are then flat topped movable tables. Here the pages are made up, and stories placed in their proper order.

Everything that goes into the Ontario Intelligencer is handled by the make-up man. Comic bands advertising slides, while others finish news. Men grow extremely proficient in placing stories into the forms, and in inserting small strips of lead between the lines, to make the columns of proper length. These are always inserted at the top of the story, because the added white space between the lines makes the type more prominent.

Iron Monster Speaks In A Voice of Thunder; the Press Room Has Charms

Press Is Challenging Authentic Voice of a Newspaper

The song of the press is yet to be written. Some day it will be done but it will take a poet of the stature of the old white bearded thunderer, Whitman, to bring to the poem the majesty of line demanded by the subject.

Like Whiteman's own barbaric yawp the voice of the Leviathan of machines is a challenge to the rush of the world. Figuratively, of course; but standing in the presence of the machine it seems literally true also.

The linotype, the monotype and the Ludlow found in newspaper plants are marvelous machines but their merit is in their cunning. They are the shrewd devices of the fantastically fairy minds inventors have made true in this day.

Voice of Thunder

The press is the good giant, an iron monster with the strength of thousands that speaks in the voice of thunder but is the willing servant of the men who control it.

The editorial department is a newspaper's nerve center, the business office the hands engaged in money changing, the circulation department the swift feet that carry it to the world but the press is its challenging, authentic voice.

It is not the rattle of the linotype and the clicking of the telegraph that rings in the ears of men who have left the trade of journalism to follow newspaper business and publicity careers but the great thundering press that remains the audible voice that seems adequate even for that tremendous creation—modern newspaper—that speaks otherwise only through the soundless medium of marching lines of type.

Rudyard Kipling never once said that every bookstore gave him the feeling of standing in a holy place. The statement labels him a not too exacting lover of literature but a poor newspaper man. He should have made a bookstore room and not a bookstore his cathedral.

Symbol of Freedom

The press is no less of world force for being because journalistic systems have fed it with effortless of offal. It is the way of many men in the world's history who have debased the gods of their own creating.

Newspapers, true priests of the press god who bear to it fearless and outspoken editorials, news stories that represent a search for truth and ideals that are not trimmed to fit the snug requirements of greatest possible circulation, have kept the great, iron machine a symbol of the religion of freedom, honesty and progress.

Instrument of Progress

Thomas Jefferson once said that if he were given the alternative of a government without newspapers and newspapers without governments, he would choose the latter.

He knew that the intelligence of men, press, would find a way to create order exercised—through the agency of the and system in the relations of men with their neighbors, but that with free elections strangling and no medium through which it could speak its thoughts and its will, the light of civilization would be snuffed out and the world steeped in darkness and the evils of despotism that thrive in darkness.

The sage of Monticello would be confirmed in this opinion if he could behold the mighty instrument for progress evidenced in the modern newspaper and its great mechanism.

Watching the Press

These are the thoughts that come to a newspaper man watching the papers pour out of the fast revolving press.

Even In Repose

Even in repose the press room is a thing of disturbing beauty. There is beauty of motion in the whirling machines and beauty of design in the inventors have made true in this day.

man it. We jot a lot of notes down and beat it back to the office at noon. There we grab a typewriter and pound out some more copy until about half-past one and then we go to lunch provided no big story breaks that keeps us going for another hour.

"After lunch we have a wonderful time running down the best again and getting slapped in the face with news at every turn. Back in the office we pound a typewriter again until about 5 or 6 o'clock and then we get our dinner, supper or tea, according to the custom of the boarding house, wife or mother as the case may be.

"Yes, it's a fine life. There is generally a meeting to cover in the evening that lasts anywhere, from eight o'clock until midnight. After that we write it up and then we unload the last show of fatigue and write a story while we answer phone calls at the same time telling the public who won the fight and also the final hockey score. We get through about 2 o'clock in the morning and have the rest of the time until noon to ourselves. We generally employ ourselves catching a few hours of sleep before starting in again at 8 o'clock in the morning."

Sunday Broken Up

"My, but it is a nice life," remarked Lizzie, edified, through her spearmint. "How do you spend your holidays?"

"Oh, it's not always as hard as that," replied the scribe. "Far be it from me to discourage any one who wants to be a reporter. We like it. If we didn't we wouldn't stick at it. There are some days when it's a little slack and that sort of makes up for the busy periods. Our holidays are usually taken up with reporting events that other people are enjoying and we ponder the typewriter just the same."

"Well, you surely have Sunday to yourself," protested Lizzie.

"Oh, yes, part of the day," replied the scribe. We generally go down to the office for a few hours in the afternoon or evening to pound out a couple of stories for Monday's paper. Yes, no news never stops. It just keeps on happening and we naturally get a kick out of keeping up with it. It's a great life if you're cut out for it."

Well, you sure know how to be familiar with the big shots and make his cigars," commiserated Lizzie with lingering sarcasm.

"That's all part of the game," replied the scribe as he let himself out of the big oak doors into the busy street.

Fifty-Five Thousand Chances to Err When Printing News Page

Produced by human hands newspapers are not free from errors. There are, however, comparatively few mistakes in the publishing of the modern journal. When one considers the fact that there are 65,0,6 pieces of an error on a single page of the average daily newspaper, they will recognize the fact that errors in spelling, wrong pronunciation and misspelled headings are natural.

Where are the more than 55,000 chances of making a mistake on a single newspaper page? They will be admitted after a moment's reflection is given to the making of a solid page of type. There are 36 letters to a line and a line to an inch and 170 inches of type to a page. In addition to the usual reading matter in the news stories there are pictures, cartoons and headlines. Consider in addition to all that every story before it reaches the press goes through the hands of seven persons; the reporter, the editor, the foreman of the composing room, the typesetters, the galleyboy, the proof reader, and the corrector of the proofs.

The many operations through which the reading matter goes before it is made ready for the press make it evident that the modern newspaper after all has a good record in its efforts to publish a reasonable paper.

No Perfect Publication

Errors do occur from time to time. There is probably not a publication in the world in which some little mistake may not be found. The fact is that errors will always occur but the modern newspaper despite the fact of thousands of chances of error has reduced them to the lowest possible minimum. Trifling mistakes probably are best ignored. When the victims of newspaper errors are silent and quietly put up with the unfortunate incident.

However, the great rank and file of the public who may be the victims of newspaper accidents look rather for particular significance in the more harmless. Other times they may be annoyed and cause unpleasantness before the editor, reporter, and possess for the editor, reporter, and oppress for the editor, reporter, and oppress for the editor, reporter, and oppress

Girl Unafraid

The Tragedy of a Woman Who Defied Convention in the Name of Love

By Gladys Johnson

...Secure Talcott-the-Beach reached the scintillating height ...of becoming San Francisco's most romantic cafe, or had reached dizzy ...heights overlooking Hollywood, its solitary glory on the city's ocean ...front.

...The night now used for dancing, formerly only for a buffet supper, ...by landscapers for the pleasure-seekers ...while gathered there. Summer nights, and ...had gradually evolved into a con...fused and laughing shuffle.

...On the night when she had come ...her with Ken this had been a pleasant lecture to madcap revelry of the evening, to warm their way ...through the merry crowd, pressed close and laughing.

...But tonight, as she slipped into Tom Corbett's arms, the pleasancy was lost. Warning...uttered listlessly by the shuffling crowd . . . breathing of crushed flowers and stale perfume ...faces swimming by like drowned shadows in the half light . . . she had to fight to keep her spirits from drooping.

Ardeth Gets a Shock

...Fortunately, Tom was not subtle. He seemed the strained note in Ardeth's laughter. He thought only that he had the prettiest girl on there and he said her so. As the sudden smile she bowed him, he caught his breath and ...tender warmth crept into his heart. As they made their slow way down the hall, passing the open doors of the small private dining rooms, Ardeth eyed each one beneath her lashes, hoping—and dreading—to see Ken.

She had already seen Dale Atwood and Phyllis Hawkins dancing by. Now, in a small room at the further end of the house she saw the rest of Cecile's party.

Fred Eastwood's broad back, turned to the door as he bent to speak to his dinner partner—a woman Ardeth did not recognize. At the end of the table, as coldly beautiful as a moonbeam in a secretly smart way while satin dismay dress, was Cecile. Beside her, leaning on one elbow, head bent so the light gleamed on his hair, turning it surprisingly blond above the black of his tuxedo, was Ken.

At the sight of him Ardeth felt her blood rush back to her heart, felt her face go white and pinched. Instinctively she clung to Tom's stocky figure for her knees went weak.

The party was agitated automatically and his gaze, warm with pride, rested on her shining hair.

A "Doormat" Woman?

At that moment Ken raised his head and Ardeth's wide stare, became trans fixed.

A breath of time only; then the measure of the music had carried her by the open door—away from the blue misery in Ken's eyes, and Ardeth drop ped her lashes quickly, lest Tom read

Back at the table she was determinedly gay. Her sweet, hich laugh was frequent; she chatted with a bright, vivacity, feeling all the while as though she were in some unhappy dream.

It was an open wound in her mind. She turned on herself with bitter mockery. "I'm not going to stretch herself, oui fo ra man to walk on! She seemed to hear the cackle of Aunt Stell's derisive laughter. Nell's bitter words: Cecile's scorn. "...I hate a gourmet woman!"

"Mary wants to talk to you, Tom. Go on in there—I'll finish this—"

The girl had a startled glimpse of the other's face, surprised affrontedness. Ken's face, so raw with anguish that her heart jumped. Mary Eastwood's curious eyes watching from the dining room.

Then she was swept into the crowd by Ken, swung away from Tom, who still stood irresolute.

Her heart was pounding, stifling her so that she could not speak. But the man gave her no chance to speak. Eyes dark with anger, nostrils quivering, he said "Think I can stand that! You looking at him like that! You know Tom's crazy about you..."

She gasped. Her eyes as angry as his own. "You—you" she sputtered. "You—telling me what to do! After ton-ght—pro—let me go!"

She tried to tear out of his arms and he pinned her so close to him that she could not choose the dance. "Don't Get Hurt!"

"You don't know what you're talking about!" his voice was smothered between his teeth. "You don't know, I tell you—God—what I've been through tonight—"

"And I" her voice was shrill. "I waiting—poor fool—a doormat—to you, doormat!" She tried to laugh, and it turned into a dry sob.

His eyes flinched and he shook heavily. "No! You don't know what you're talking about—I've got to tell you"—

She lifted bright, indignant eyes. "You have nothing to say to me—not anything—ever again"—

He was white to the lips. "Perhaps you're right—perhaps it's best. But you must know"—

The music stopped and she tore herself out of his arms. Walked back to the table. Dar'ling her way through the crowd so that he could not reach her to speak.

He followed, stood for a moment as she took her chair.

"Ardeth"—he stopped, white misery turning his face to a mask. She would not lift her head. He made a queer futile gesture with his hands. Suddenly walked away.

Ardeth saw, through eyes blurred with angry tears, that Tom had seated himself in the chair opposite. Tom's head and face were very grave. He studied her downcast eyes for a moment then frowned slowly.

"So, that's it . . . " he said softly. "Ken—don't it, Ardeth?"

It did not seem strange that it should be Tom Corbett sitting there talking so quietly and so intimately with her.

A queer puckered look about Tom's mouth. As though he tasted defeat and found it was not sweet.

"Ken . . . " he said again. He reached over, placed a heavy hand over her own where it picked at the tablecloth.

"Little kid" said Tom softly. "Don't get hurt, little kid."

While cure a blow in its and out the window, sending a ghastly whisper through the dark room . . .

Sinking into troubled dreams to rouse with a start to depressing reality . . .

Turning over wearily because the pillow under her cheek was wet.

The space of window at the foot of the bed grey with dawn. Far away, the rattle of the first car . . . com-

Ken Is Insistent

She slipped from bed and heavily made her way to the wall phone. Tom's hoy said he would ring her today. She ...ked that he would . . .

Ken's voice coming over the wire. "Ardeth, I've got to see you."

Ken's thumping in the she could not keep her voice steady. "What's the use, Ken?"

"I...t's of use. Is it fair to condemn a man unheard?"

She was silent for a breadth of time, half supporting herself by the table. Her heavy eyes watching the curtain blow in and out.

Finally, in a tired voice, "but what is there to say? I know what happened." ...lowed him to do that. She could not ...ir...g to hold to your own version, aren't you?"

"What else can I think?" she asked wildly. "I called . . . and then to see you . . . "

"Then I'm coming right over?" he said and hung up before she could protest.

She pulled on her clothes with shaking hands. Then with a sudden impulse looked at her from the mirror was a stranger. She flung on her coat. Pulled a small hat down over her eyes, shaded her eyes.

She was standing on the pavement before the entrance of the hotel when Ken's car pulled up.

Are You Through With Me?

Her heart leaped painfully at her eyes met. No bright and laughing charm about Ken today. His face was pale. His mouth grim.

He opened the door of the car and she got in without a word.

Sunday-calm over the city. Church bells ringing here and there. Children self conscious in their best clothes walking through the sunshine to Sunday school—Stacks of the morning papers in corner stores. An air of leisurely well being over the city. Breakness only in her heart . . .

"Well." Ken said finally in a tight voice. "Through with me, aren't you?" She moved her hands slightly but did not answer.

He gave a mirthless laugh. "Don't blame you . . . It's the only way out, I guess. Here's what happened when-ever you want to hear it or not. Late yesterday, Dr. Knowles got on touch with me. He's an old friend . . . " And he told me that Mother . . . he paused, "my mother's in a bad way, Ardeth. She—she's going. Just a matter of time—"

He sudden's stopped.

Ardeth's hand that her cold hand had gone to cover his own on the wheel. He did not seem to feel it and after a moment she took it back.

"I can't believe it!" Sharp protest in that which almost rose to pain. For a moment he hurled silently, then resumed: more quietly. "Well . . . it's what comes to us all, I guess. But to watch it—day by day! Not hope—the doctor said! Oh, of course she doesn't know! She thinks it's something e'se—that she's getting better. . . . but that tiresome Cecile told you about when she just about starved herself and lived in that cold, nasty room—that started it, Ardeth. And when I remember she did it for me—so I could live in comfort—like a fool—God I feel as though I had murdered her!"

"No! No, Ken! You couldn't help it! How could you know?"

Else was watching him with eyes gone wet. Ken stared straight ahead. His profile had sharpened and his suffering his eyes were flinched.

An interval when only the hum of the tires on the asphalt broke the silence.

Ken's eyes had swept away Ardeth's resentment. She did not wonder how Ken had come to be at Tally's that night dancing after receiving such shocking knowledge. Tall's and dancing—Cecile and the heartache of the night were very far away and trivial in this moment.

Newsboys calling through the sunshine. Fat wind flinging the blood. Everything speak ng of life and motion. This bright success morning. How could there be any death?

With the inability of youth to grasp the actuality she was moved—horrified —yet not entirely comprehending. Even the man spoke of death he felt the spell of sorrow yet mixed its dark meaning. "You know you can't realize it, Ardeth. C—l—k—w—ld die—but it!—my mother . . . actually know . . . "

The Imperious Mother

He drew a shuddering breath. "She's always been a little thing—but the spir t of a soldier. I used to call her Spider Kelly—to tease her. Such a dainty, imperious little thing, you know. I rounded funny. And I'd swoop on her—then when I came home—and grab her up under one arm and prick her around like that—and she'd order me in that voice dignified as ever, and pretending she didn't like it—while I laughed . . . "

He suddenly stopped speaking.

After a long moment. "Well . . . When I went home—after seeing Dr. Knowles, she sent me on that list Cecile's birthday."

"You know, Ardeth." Ken's voice was hardened "Mother's complete'y sold on Cecile. All my life—Oh well, I've told you that. Well—ever since we were kids I've yearn to be rich—terribly rich. It used to be ice-cream flabs, you know, and—and—and dresses and dances—

...while I was waiting. Tom passed, He asked me to go. I was nearly crazy when I was with alone, every minute is a year, you know"—

"Ken, I—"

"He interrupted her halting voice. "Don't blame you, Ardeth. I—I—I lost sort of got me, seeing you look up at him like that. But I should talk—I have no right"—

"Don't say that," she cried sharply. "Oh, dearest—there's only you!" Heedless of passing cars, she flung her arms about him.

Ken was pale to the lips as he gently loosed her grasp. His eyes avoided her own—went far out to fasten on a red or blanker nothing in the way out the Cate. He spoke slowly, as though he had difficulty finding the words.

"I'm so damned miserable, Ardeth, I don't know how to say this. I've been thinking—going over and over last night in my mind until I'm nearly crazy. Seeing you, last night with Tom sort of opened my eyes. He—he likes you, Tom does. I feel—oh, I feel like one in the manger—"

"Why?" her stiff lips would hardly form the word.

"To keep you from—from other fellows."

"Oh." Her hands were clasped so tightly thus the knuckles were bloodless. "Oh" . . .

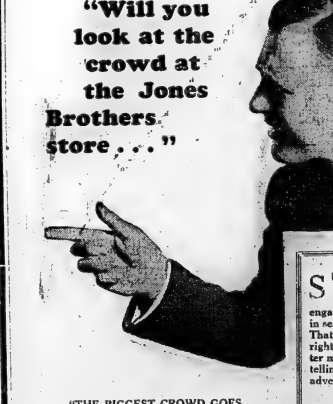
He turned on her with a sort of angry violence. "You don't think—you think that! That I don't care! There's nothing I wouldn't go through for you! I'd marry you tomorrow — but—there is mother. I can't break her heart. I went to her and told her that you—that I—Oh—of course she'd see that I wanted me to be happy—that's the way we love with our mothers—but her—on—Cecile. She thinks she's doing the best thing for me. And how can I cross her now?"

He lost, uttered a groan.

"No—" she whispered. "No—you can't."

He went on more calmly. "Stall . . . That's what I've been doing. You know it! Hoping things will come right If she had any one else—my father—my mother die . . . but she won't hurt her. And I have no right to ask you to wait. Even, maybe . . . a year. I'm like you—and old Tom more than half in love with you, Ardeth."

Sweet and vivid relief shooting through her veins. Warning her to life—to a love which was pain.



"Oh—darling—" she was fumbling for his hand. "Is that all! Wait — Oh—for a hundred years! Any time, Ken. It's coming right for us in the end! I thought—Oh, I thought you didn't want me!"

"Want you." The husky roughness in his voice was music. "Child about you, Moth. But—I'm caught!"

She was suddenly buoyant. "Ah, just for now! But some day things are going to come right for us!"

He flinching away from his own thoughts. Drew a deep sigh. "Maybe you're right . . . After all. why shouldn't they?"

SUCH expressions of surprise emanate from merchants who still believe that the world is busily engaged "beating paths in the woods" in search of better "mouse traps" . . . That mouse trap theory may have been right when it was first uttered, but better mouse trap builders of TODAY are telling the world about it in newspaper advertising columns.

Jones Brothers drew that crowd to their store by sending their message of "value giving" into the homes occupied by the various members of that crowd and not by waiting for the crowd to "beat a path to their door".

Head-Line Writing on a Newspaper Requires Skill

"Why Editors Grow Grey," Is Answered By a Veteran

Many editors grow grey; would make the colour of a humorous and the same time considerate explanation a veteran in one of the cub reporters in commenting upon the trials of head writing. For the benefit of those who are not used to the proper usage of a newspaper office it might be explained that a "head" is the caption which appears at the top of print most people call an "article" but the newspaper men call a "story."

The writing of headings is not a simple art. While it has driven many writers profane that lassie, it is the one occasion in the publication of a daily paper that drives editors grey more than anything else. Getting a heading to say all that it should say within the space allowed is not as easy as the explanation of the operation might seem.

The example if the head ing is to be at the top of a story of only one column width there are several considerations that enter into the process. The size of type is one thing and the number of letters that will fit in the space is another. Editors in modern newspapers do not use arbitrarily. They used to in the early 40s but it is now considered form in a newspaper office to do so. Of course word. "Blah" is now the only recognized sharp expression in vogue and editors in anger are not supposed to overdue this limitation. Besides there are ladies working in newspaper offices now and they frown if an editor forgets himself and shouts he-double-dence the reason for premature grey hairs.

If single column headings were the only ones used by newspapers it would be easy. But there are double column, triple columns, streamers, and other varieties as numerous as a popular brand of pickles.

There are also a lass of types with names as formidable as the terms to be found in a medical dictionary. From eight to the morning until fourte six o'clock might the man on the desk is wrestling with all sizes and styles of type as a clerk for ideas and the trick is to get them to fit. "If" and "ands" are barred and there are many other rules which do not require an umpire for interpretation.

On a sloppy day in November when the rain is pelting against the window and the overheated radiators start the woolen underwear itching, the ordinary editor enjoys writing headings. On such a day headings have a habit of suggesting themselves in forms that wouldn't fit any kind of type; much less squeeze themselves into the proper line spaces. They also have a habit of becoming ambiguous to a point that gives an editor a legitimate excuse for going home at the end of the day and thunder ing his wife or his mother-in-law.

Although a strenuous craft the editor after the first 100 years acquires a mastery of head writing which is actually remarkable. He became so used to the styles of type and the number of letters required to fill out a single, double or triple column line that he can work with his eyes shut or when half asleep. It is claimed on improved, semi-automatic sweat and he acquires again a youthful appearance.

Why Crabs Develop

"I used to wonder when I first started in the newspaper game, why editors were such crabs" said the veteran. "I found out after I started writing heads that things have improved now. The men who used up all the profanity in the language blazed the trail and it's easy now. One setter from the most interesting facts, gets it together in sketchy words, fits them into two lines of three lines in the right number of letters for a one, two column or three column space, writes out the banner that you beneath and send it out to the printer with a smile.

Headings are written on a separate slip of paper and the "catch" line containing the first two words of the head ing are written at the left hand corner of the "copy" so that the two will be assembled later by the composition, in the composing room. It becomes a habit and is might be said that when the editor has "done" a good head which pearls with "pep" a paper and he is give a kick out of it that's worth while. Local headings generally have the most kick but they are sometimes not appreciated as much by the people involved in the story as they are by the editor who writes them and the public who are treated with the extra line of the story by the interest with the heading provoke.

MISS BRING CHEER TO BRITISH AMBASSADOR

LONDON, England.—Miss Bring cheer helped while away the lonely hours for a score men who made their home in the Embassy recently recorded by W. W. Jemmett, secretary of the Central Discharged Prisoners' Aid Society.

"A prisoner once came to me on the morning of his release with a note," said Mr. Jemmett. "They were his prison pets. He had tamed and trained them and they were called Joey and James. They would always come to their master when he called or whistled to them. And when he walked out of the prison gates after his release he took them with him in a little cage."

claimant for popular favor was The Sun, published by Mr. Greenleaf. It began life two long lay lasted only a short period. A Mr. Harr started the Plain Speaker in 1836. It was friendly to the "rebel" cause of William Lyon Mackenzie. Those were exciting days in the little burg and the editor of the Plain Speaker proves to have led a life consistent with the period in which he lived. He was finally landed in the Kingston penitentiary for an attempted raid on a bank at Cobourg. Soldiers afterwards marched to the offices of the Plain Speaker, threw the type fonts into the river and trailed the manager through the streets and jail. This raid, was occasioned, it is said, because the paper appeared one day with the British coat-of-arms upside down.

THE CHRONICLE IN 1811.

The direct progenitor of the Weekly Ontario was the Victoria Chronicle, established in 1811 by Washburn and Sutton. It was published in the Victoria buildings, corner of Victoria avenue and Front street. The name Victoria was used because Belleville was then situated in the "Victoria" parliamentary division, a division that included several of the present counties.

In 1849 the Victoria Chronicle was acquired by Elisha Miles and he ran it successfully until 1873, when it became amalgamated with the Weekly Ontario. In 1850, Mr. Miles changed the name of the paper to the Hastings Chronicle. In 1870 Messrs. J. W. Carman and Jacob Yeomans formed a joint stock company, known as the Ontario Publishing Company. On Saturday, March 26, 1870, they issued the first number of the Daily Ontario. The following week the first number of the Weekly Ontario appeared. J. W. Carman, an able newspaper writer, became editor, while Mr. Yeomans acted as business manager.

The Ontario Publishing Company continued to issue the paper for five years, when T. S. Carman, who had founded the Napanee Express, moved to Belleville and acquired a property. For a time he retained the services of his brother as editor. Mr. Carman held control until April 15, 1910, when W. H. Morton and J. O. Herity purchased and took over the business.

OTHER JOURNALISTIC VENTURES.

In 1811 the Victoria Magazine was placed on the market by Joseph Wilson, with Sheriff and Mrs. Moody, the latter the well known author, as editors, but the magazine lasted only a year. In 1837 and 1841 Mr. Washburn published a monthly magazine of miscellaneous matter, which he called by various titles, "Wilson's Experience," and, "Wilson's Canada Casket," and "The Electric Magazine," and so on, but none of them were of long or robust life.

Other papers were started, only to die after a few years life. They were The Tribune, The Independent, which lasted seven years; The Free Press, The Patriot, and last of all, The Sun.

The Sun was an ambitious sheet and was established in 1894 by Cameron Brown, a son-in-law of Sir George Ross, and a gentleman of fine ability and varied experience as a journalist. The Sun, during its chequered career of eight years gave an added spice to newspaperdom in Belleville and provided an admirable news and editorial service to its readers.

The Sun ceased to shine in 1902.

On April 15, 1910, W. H. Morton and J. O. Herity took over the plant and business of The Daily Ontario from T. S. Carman and continued to publish it as a partnership until 1920 when J. O. Herity left the newspaper business to become Industrial Commissioner for Belleville, a position which he has filled with remarkable success and still holds. Since 1922 the business of The Daily Ontario, commercial printing and newspaper, has been owned and operated by W. H. Morton who has now acquired all rights and title to The Intelligencer Printing and Publishing House, Limited, including the block in which the plant is located in the heart of the business section of Belleville.

The combined paper will be known as The Daily Ontario Intelligencer.

Belleville was Vigorous Town

[illegible] street, Ont. John W. Meyers purchased the north [illegible] in the 60s and [illegible] and immediately built a dam across the river and erected a flour mill, the first [illegible] in the village. In 1904 [illegible] was built across the river, connecting Dundas street.

Up to 1816 Belleville was called Meyer's Creek. The river was known as the Iaskarawa, as the Mohawks, at one time, would [illegible] see preserved. The river was called Simpson's River until at a later date the name was changed to the Moira, in honor of the Earl of Moira. In 1816 the village was renamed by Governor Gore who called it Belleville, after his wife Lady Bella.

First Postmaster

That same year Surveyor Wilmott laid out the Township on Lot 1 into town lots of one-half acre each. A Post Office was established and Dr. McNabb had the honor of being the first postmaster. The honor is also recorded in the history of Belleville women, in the year 1816, that Mrs. Meyers was the way, very slow. In 1818 the village had 150 inhabitants; in 1834 it had 900; 1870 it had grown to 700 and by 1836 the population had increased to 1700.

First Flagstone Walk

In this latter year the first flagstone walk was put down. It extended along Front street, from Dundas to the Upper bridge. In this same important year of 1836 Belleville was separated from the County of Thurlow and became an incorporated village. The Municipal Act of Board of Police as it was then called, consisted of Messrs. Hugh McKenzie, Emmana, elected from the first ward, and Zenus Dafoe and Wm. Conger elected from the second ward, with Bills Flint, Qr. as a fifth member. Bills Flint was elected by the Board as its first president or reeve of the municipality.

Incorporated as Town

In 1838 the courthouse and jail were built at a cost of $25,640. The contractors were Robert Hamilton and David Dutt. In 1850 Kingston. In 1850 the village was incorporated as a town and was separated from the county the same year. The following were elected members of the council that year: Mayor, B. F. Davy, (who was re-elected); Aldermen, G. G. Benson, F. McAnnany; Ketcheson Ward, B. F. Davy, Dr. R. Holden; Baldwin Ward, Jonathan McCurdy, John Coulter; Coleman Ward, R. F. Coleman and Burleigh Ward, Hugh and John Donaghue. M. Sawyer was the Town Clerk.

First Court Held

In 1839 Benjamin Dougall presided at the first assembly of the quarter sessions. E. Murney was clerk of the peace and J. W. D. Moody, Sheriff. In 1860 the assessed value of property was $1,586,320. In 1861 the decennial census revealed a population of 6,277. Ten years later it had grown to 7,305; in 1881 it was 9516; in 1901 it had reached 6916. By 1.91 it had declined to 9117.

Local Church History

The first church in Belleville was erected by the Methodists in 1810. Belleville and surrounding district has ever since been a stronghold of Methodism. The first church was a frame structure, 30 by 50 feet. The pulpit was composed of rough boards. The seats were made from the same material with blocks of wood for rests In 1831 the Methodists erected a new church on the same site. This ancient structure still stands on Pinnacle street, and is used by Mr. Mark Sprague as a storehouse. The first Church of England west of Adolphustown was erected in Belleville in 1826. Rev. T. Campbell was the first rector of the parish. He had charge until the time of his death in 1835.

The first Presbyterian clergyman to arrive was the Rev. Mr. Ketchum and through his instrumentality the first Presbyterian church was erected.

Of bargains, or specials which figure so highly in modern advertisements one finds not a word, although one finds that some goods are "sold as low as the lowest," or at "a small advance above cost." Over the actual prices all merchants were similarly reticent, feeling no doubt that mention of them savoured too much of haggling.

There were testimonials of insurance, of real estate but wanted plain facts, easy them to read the message in the large space devoted to "Cosby's Lady's Book," the arbiter of styles and fashions in the seventies. This high-minded journal advised the public that it combined in its pages "whatever is elevating, whatever is pure, dignified and virtuous in sentiment with whatever may afford rational and innocent amusement."

There were business cards of all sizes, from neat professional announcements to larger displays mentioning many wares.

Each was the trend in the early days of advertising. Merchants did not discuss their goods with such freedom, or go into any detail in their description, and the modern woman would be impatient with such methods. Modern advertisements tell her all about a product at first glance, or she is not interested. Small wonder that she would view with amazement the newspaper of long ago.

The Make-Believe Wife

A Tale of Marriage, Suspicion, Jealousy and an Unexpected Ending

by Kathleen Norris

Well, that was over. And it was all Hugh's fault. He frowned—with a little firm setting of her young mouth—that Hugh was restless!

"Love!" Lola said scornfully. "That's her type, that's just—I don't know what!"

But she had lost her serenity, her sense of security and triumph. She was suddenly very much frightened by what she was doing. She was a crazy thing to do, certainly, to bash away from the situation as if she had been afraid of it. No matter. It was done.

Hugh's mother had always been most kind to her, and his sisters too. A wretched way to repay them, to run away, with it will look that in some way she could make a living in New York—she could write—she could sell something!

Terror shook her. The events of the evening crowded already upon her, as if the waters of life had closed over them. Grown up, indeed! She had nothing in common with that frightened girl who had put on the blue velvet gown for the Jacobs dinner party.

Beside the locked about the neat, serviceable little room, with its rocker and mirrors and writing. There was a constant nature and her bags were.

The train reached a country town, lights flashed in at the crack under her window shade, and a conductor had set up a mad ding-dandle.

She would be in Hoboken, the porter had said, at 7:25 and arrive in New York about twenty minutes later—a terrible city to be alone in. A city like a machine.

Beatrice's heart began to hammer in fright. She could not look backward; it was inconceivable either that Hugh should overlook this escapade or that she should stoop to ask him to. But what lay ahead?

She could not even remember now what all the trouble and up car had been about. Hugh and Bert and Aileen. In that stuffy, horrid little room, and voices—

"Yes, but why didn't I just explain to Hugh? Tell him what Bert and I have been up to? I would have spelled the surprise for them, everything is spoiled, anyway. Anything—anything would have been better than this!"

Perhaps this was exactly what Aileen had hoped would happen she reflected. Perhaps Aileen had hoped that she would run away, blacken her own name and do all the mischief in the chaperones' good name. Just the one thing that they would not handle alone, the unforgivable sin. Publicity and gossip and scandal, and connected with Bert too.

Suddenly the full horror of the situation swept over her, and Beatrice sat up in bed, cupping her chin in her hands, chattering hard staring into space.

"Why I can't do this! I can't do this! What am I doing? Everywhere! Nowhere! Oh, mother—and then she wept, softly, miserably, like a little girl, a year ago, bewildered by the strange book prospect of a marriage with a man she knew her ages. She had known nothing of men; nothing of life and of her own heart. She had been like a little dream wife, loving, happy, unconscious, unseeing. Knowing nothing of passion, she had never felt its absence in herself.

Now she was awake. Or, rather, she had begun to awaken weeks ago, under Bert's youth and ardor and adoration. And, awakening, she had stumbled blindly out of paradise. "I feel so giddy!" Beatrice reminded herself. "I'll go somewhere—"

Across the street was the solid red walls of the Waldorf. She and Hugh had had breakfast there, on a hot early summer morning, and he had been waiting at all his trips to New York as always liked that moment best. To sit at the dining-room window and watch the world go by, and pour the thick, hot coffee, and break the white rolls.

She went in. The big room was almost empty, and deliciously warm, with the sunshine slanting in through high windows. A waiter nodded to her request for a window table, and she followed him.

Two men were breakfasting together at the next window; or, rather, they were talking together in low tones while they awaited their breakfast. Beatrice, sitting at them, left her suede, went to their table, and looked down at them.

"Hugh—" she said, in a faltering voice.

Then that a great many things happened rapidly; Beatrice clung to Hugh's arm and watched them from the watery depth of a divine content. The stranger, who had been writing things on a card, relating to a celebrated movie lady, with a plain smile, pocketed a check, nodded with satisfaction, and remained to finish his breakfast.

Hugh guided Beatrice out to the lobby, and—and suddenly fascinating New York was fascinating again, the shops glittering and gay, the omnibuses tempting and the crowd friendly—and they had a third taxi, and were at the Chatfields before he would let her say a word or would even look at her.

And here they had their own enormous room, with the great west windows into Forty-ninth Street, and boys were running to and fro, with flowers and newspapers and trays again, and presently just as the clock struck nine and the tired dog lowed and the sun burst out over the city in full glorious force, there was delicious coffee and grapefruit and rolls waiting and they were alone.

Hugh put his arms about her then, and said, in a whisper:

"My God, my God! I have you back again. I have you back again!"

Beatrice began to cry from sheer happiness, and buried her face on his shoulder, and Hugh took his fine big soft pocket handkerchief and gently wiped the tears away. They were tears in his own eyes.

"Hugh, I have to tell you! I'm so sorry—"

"Oh, Beatrice—Beatrice—don't. It was all my stupidity."

"No, no, it was mine!"

"Well, let's have breakfast," he said with a shaky laugh, "and then we can talk."

She sat down, and it was as if the last few troubled months had been wiped away, and they two were on their first happy, visit to the city again.

"I'm so happy!" Beatrice breathed, closing her eyes.

"You can imagine what I am."

"Hugh, were you on that train? The train that makes up in North Dakota hill and leaves at four."

"No, but I thought you might be on it."

"But how——" the miracle of it! The miracle of security after even this short taste of desolation. "How could you possibly guess that, Hugh?"

"I telephoned Mother—I came in just after you left, by the way, and met poor Nelly coming downstairs almost distracted, and telephoned Mother, and of course you weren't there. Nelly called two or three big hotels, and I changed as fast as I could——"

"And made love to me!"

"No train, Noon drove me. Or rather I drove Noon."

His face grew grave at the recollection, and she drew a deep breath.

"One hundred and thirty miles hour o'clock this morning. Hugh!"

TWICE BENEFITED BY SAME REMEDY

Recommends Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cobourg, Ontario—"Years ago when I had a sick father and I had to care for him I did not rest. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped me so much that I was able to do my work. After my father died I was left in poor health. I had several doctors and they said I had a serious female trouble and must have an operation. I would not consent to that as I had seen so much suffering from operations. I remembered what the Compound had done for me before and I took it again. It has helped me so much that I am able to do my housework. I recommend it to any woman as the age when she needs building up."—Mrs. T. E. Sleeman, R.R. 4, Cobourg, Ontario.

Aaron Shapiro Says Canadian Wheat Pool's Policy Wrong

CONTROL BY LAW

Sees Little Betterment of Conditions Under Present Method

(Canadian Press)

Berkley, Calif., April 2—By attempting to speculate in wheat instead of acting solely as a marketing organization, The Canadian Wheat Pool, which controls fifty percent of acreage in Western Canada, failed to carry out its duties successfully, declared Aaron Shapiro, Chicago, national authority on co-operative selling, in an address here. Mr. Shapiro attributed the decline in Canadian wheat values to "bad mismanagement" by good and well-guided Wide betterment of the situation until a different marketing method is devised. For Canada he advocates the policy of hundred per cent. marketing control by the legislation.

BOY IS MISSING AT LATTA FARM

Foster Parents Unable to Understand His Disappearance

(Canadian Press)

Theodore Lynch aged 14, a young farm helper who has been residing at Latta has disappeared and a search has been instituted for him. He left no trace nor any word as to his destination and much anxiety is being felt for him. He went home from school about noon on noon, changed to his laboring clothing, went to the barn and his tracks after that have been closely covered. A search party of men he was regarded as a capable worker and his foster parents are unable to understand his disappearance.

Young Lynch was a ward of the Children's Aid Society until last October when he went to live with home where he appeared to be quite contented. Captain T. D. Mulvihill of the city is quite concerned over the lad and has asked this newspaper as well as neighbors and residents of the district to be on the lookout for the boy. The disappearance has been reported to the Provincial Police who are assisting in the search. It is reported that he had been having minor trouble at school and this may be the reason for his leaving home. Captain Ruston states that anyone harboring the boy is liable to prosecution and a heavy fine or jail sentence. There is a strong belief that he is still in the district. Anyone having any knowledge of young Lynch's whereabouts is urged to get in touch with Captain Ruston at once.

Silk Hat on Captain's Head Seen in Toronto

TORONTO, April 2 (CP)—Tilted at a rakish angle on the head of Captain "Bob" Wright of the Dredge Sandlands is the ancient silk hat. Captain Bob won the timeworn Kelly and with it goes the honor of being the master of the first vessel to enter the Port of Toronto this year. Captain Wright piloted the Sandlands into the harbor early today having made the first trip from Niagara-on-the-Lake.

This beaver hat business is old stuff on the lakes, but mighty precious at that. Who started it no one knows. But away back in the dim ages of Great Lakes navigation some one presented the Captain with a silk top pier for opening navigation. The custom spread rapidly, and now, in nearly every port of the inland seas, one of the "upstanding" lids is tucked away from one year to the other. With the first sign of spring, the harbor-master digs down into the cupboard. From the depths he produces the old Kelly. It is carefully dusted off and prepared for use. One fine morning, the whistle blows and the vessel docks. The harbor master is, at the slip. He carries the hat. With fitting ceremony and amid cheers, he crowns the Captain. Navigation for that particular port is officially open. Since few captains, heroic as many of them are, would venture far wearing the famous hat, it is customary then to again tuck the Kelly away until next spring, while the captain is awarded a new hat for his sacrifice.

RECORDS SHOW PRESENT APRIL WARMER THAN THAT OF PAST

City Waterworks Manager's Analysis of Weather Conditions

WILLIAM T. GRIFFIN

With the coming of genuine spring weather it is interesting to note the vagaries of temperature during the past few years. A year of especial interest was 1920, seven years ago, when the temperature for April the first, showed a high of 13 and a low of 1 above zero. On April 2nd of the same year, the temperature was registered at 30 and 9 above zero, and on this day a mi-t drove across the Bay or Quinte with a horse and cutter, to the pumphouse to Redneraville. This is a remarkable occurrence, as the ice in the Bay is usually unsafe beginning with the middle of March. On April the 2nd and again in 1923 the ice began to move and on the bay starting across from the pumphouse.

Last year's records also show some interesting statistics. On the whole the month was cold one and the temperature registered on today's corresponding date was 40th. An exception-ally warm April fell during the first thirty one days, and it rained on April 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th, without stopping. Rain started again on the 11th, continued almost without cessation until the end of the month. A total rainfall of 3.34 inches fell during the month.

Harry Sweetsterm

Five years ago on April 19th, Old Man Winter wearing his best to a last attempt to show his authority, sent us one of the worst snowstorms of the year. Records show that 14½ inches of snow fell during the day, and on April 20th, a cold-blowing snowstorm of equal severity.

Such warm temperature will have its effect upon the ice on the bay. The ice is now pretty well in many places, and there is an open channel above the bay bridge towards Massassaga Park.

TWENTIETH SALE HOLSTEINS WAS CONDUCTED HERE

Sixteen Males Shown In Sire Competition Won By Yearling

SECOND SIRE SALE

Fifty-Six Head of Cattle Offered On the Auction Block

In the interest of better sired for breeding Holstein Friesian cattle in the Bay of Quinte district the Holstein Friesian Breeders' Association, which annually holds a sale of pedigreed cattle in this city inaugurated last year a bull competition previous to the sale and today that competition was held and with many fine young sires shown. This competition has been held now for two years only, but the quality of animals led into the show ring to be judged by Robert Holiby field man for the Holstein Friesian Breeders of Canada was much superior to any that have been shown. The animals were in fine condition and perfectly groomed and the Bay of Quinte district can still take its leading place as the breeder of this fine type of cattle. There were sixteen males shown and Ed Butler of Bright-on, Ontario, was awarded the first prize with a yearling from Champion Sylvius Lyons. This animal will be offered in the sale this afternoon and, no doubt will bring a good figure as he is the class open for the ordinary farmer.

This afternoon will mark the 20th anniversary of this sale and the class of cattle shown is some respects is better than in previous year as the animals are in prime condition and ready for a year's work. The crane 56 head offered and most of them are young with a few aged cattle with wonderful records behind them.

Norman Montgomery of Toronto, conducted the sale and James A. Caskey of Madoc, assisted him in describing the various pedigrees. Many of the prospective buyers were among the onlookers today looking the cattle over judging those which would be best suited to their herd. It is expected the late trains into the city will bring many buyers from distant points as the sale has been well advertised and buyers years, first come or the Province of Quebec to be sold in Ontario came from the sale that Malcolm knew.

The winners of the sire competition with their ages are here appended.

First—Champions Sylvius Lyons— Ed O. Butler, Brighton, Ontario.

Second—Victor Pietje Calamity—M. O. Reynolds, Frankford.

Third—Sir Waldorf Veeman—Archibald Hogarth, Napanee.

Fourth—Oaka Pontiac Concordia — F. V. Lochlin, Frankford.

Sixth—Sir Colantha King Mandyke Wylly— D. H. Dick and Son, Cannose.

BLAME THE EMPLOYERS

Give Unemployment Statistics and Offers Suggestion For Remedy

WASHINGTON, April 2.—The dole in thefor mof Government unemployment insurance, or revolution, were pictured as the alternative results of repeated unemployment crisis, without concerted action to avert thim, by William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, who testified today before the Senate Committee of Commerce, holding hearings on bills of Senator Wagner of New York to afford unemployment relief.

Mr. Green stated this conclusion in reply to a question by Senator Johnson of California, after he had presented an extended survey showing the results of a study of unemployment and presented his ideas concerning carriers of relief.

"Men should earn money," he said "not have it doled out to them without labor in return; but unless employers who take their labor forward the unions we shall face either Federal unemployment insurance or the dole or the jobless or have a revolution on our hands. Our country cannot stand these continual shocks."

CLOUDS LIFTING AT NAVAL MEET

Success Apparently Nearer As Briand Approves British Plan

LONDON, April 2.—The Daily Herald, Labor Party organ, said today, that in a result of conversation yesterday between Premier MacDonald, Right Hon. Arthur Henderson of Great Britain and Premier Briand of France, a plan, a formula has been found that may give the security the latter is demanding, and enable her to enter a five-power naval disarmament treaty. Draft Is Despatched

A draft of the formula, according to the Herald, was sent to Paris last night for thorough consideration today.

The newspaper understands that, in view of these new circumstances, Italy finds it last advisable to enter the conventions word "parity," with reference to the naval ratios, thereby removing the rigid barrier to Franco-Italian negotiations.

INCREASING BUTTERFAT PER ACRE

Cheesemakers ought to have success in their effort to increase the butterfat production per acre. They have put on a campaign in the form of a competition to bring interest to focus upon this much to be desired condition.

The cheesemakers have so far accomplished a good work for the dairy industry and they have shown that they believe there yet remains much to be done in the matter of increasing production. They looked upon the increase in production from the first standpoint, that of the producing land.

THE ANCIENT CEMETERIES

Attention of boards of rural cemeteries in Ontario has been called by the Minister of Health to conditions in cemeteries in certain parts of the Province of Ontario. The law requires that owners of cemeteries keep the grounds in order and fences in shape. In the event of failure to take action the minister will take action.

Much good work has been done by societies in this county in recovering these last resting places of the pioneering farmers from the stages of neglect into which some of them had fallen. Doubtless work remains to be done and the owners will hasten to make the changes to bring these places up to the requirements of the law.

Our history does not go back many centuries but the history is a noble one nevertheless and there should be no more faithfully kept shrines of memory than the graveyards where the forefathers of the small villages and the countryside rest after lives of hopeful toil spent in opening up a new nation.

WHAT OF THE OFFICIAL PIPE LIGHTER

Pipe smokers were interested in the story published a few days ago that a Scots firm had employed a professional lighter to light the pipes of the workmen whose lights had gone out.

Is it a favor or a suggestion that the employers have formed the decision to make the best of the situation and save as little loss of time as possible by paying for the hire of the official lighter to keep the men at their task. Is the firm humanitarian or just using common business sense in meeting a situation?

RECENT ORDER CHANOETH

Three thousand brokerage office clerks are out of work now in Ontario. That is the estimate made of the class which has gone out into the world seeking other occupation.

During the past year or two the brokerage business built up a huge and costly machine to stimulate buying and take care of the trading. With the upsetting of the apple cart in the break in New York last autumn and the descent of the Ontario Attorney General's men on brokerage houses with consequent arrests and the diminution and shrinkage of business to a minimum it is not at all to be wondered at that the number of offices has been greatly reduced. Today branches of one house did not open outside of Toronto, a sure sign that there is little buying and that overhead expense is being "cut to the bone."

Like the leaves of yesteryear are the great million share days of the past. Today is a day of little dealings among the class recently so active.

This mushroom growth was of short duration.

CODE OF LAWS IN MOVIE

The coming of talk into films has brought the inevitable cleansing of movies. It used to be that the spectator could read the occasional curse word on the lips of the silent figure on the screen but the sound device has made that impossible for the public will not stand for an oath, for profanity or for vulgarity.

Sometimes people have the notion that a film can give them a kick, that they will see vulgarity flagrant and yet the rules of the moving picture spectators and audiences is sound. They will not endure vulgar talk on the stage and less so on the screen for as the reason of this continent will exclude obscenity in word, gesture, reference, song, joke, or by suggestion; it will prevent undue exposure, scenes of passion shall not be introduced when not essential to the plot, perversion is quite forbidden on the screen, crimes against law shall never be presented in a way to throw sympathy with crime against law or justice; the subject of white slavery is excluded and indecent dances are forbidden.

One of the healthiest signs is the section of the new movie code which will uphold the sanctity of the marriage relation.

This edict is but the concrete form of the ideals of the people to protect what is right and to bar what is wrong. The movie art is too great to be sold to crime or vulgarity. It, like other arts, should be the handmaid of civilization.

COUNCIL SETTLES QUESEION

With the question of the permanent fire chief settled one of the questions which has been causing talk within and without the fire department has been determined.

SIDELIGHTS

IN A CATHEDRAL

Here is a dimness which is eloquent
Of thoughts unspoken, thoughts too high for speech,
With muted music and soft light is blent
A sense of things beyond words' utmost reach.
Here Silence lays her fingers on the lips
And pours her balm into the troubled heart;
Cares pass away like distant, out-bound ships
That slowly down the horizon depart.

Far off, across the sanctuary's gloom,
Within the space too sacred for men's feet,
Like little stars the joyous candles bloom,
Like holy thoughts the incense rises sweet;
A benediction lingers everywhere,
A brooding Presence thrills the lambent air.

SAVING MILLIONS OF DOLLARS to Canada each year through his ceaseless and effective warfare against the bacterial life which attacks fruit, and all other forms of plant life, and against the enemies of the wheat and other grains, Dr. G. H. Berkeley, of St. Catherines, is a valuable citizen of Canada. That he is a Belleville Old Boy is just another instance of the fact that Belleville boys at home and abroad have a way of distinguishing themselves. This lad did not follow the line of least resistance when faced with the duty of selecting an occupation for life, he took a lonely road which few care to follow and as a result heads a profession which is one of the most useful to humanity generally.

STEPS ARE NOW BEING TAKEN to reclaim the human flotsam and jetsam which clusters up that ancient highway known as "The Bowery" in New York City. The sum of $25,000 has been supplied to pay for an intensive study of the Bowery floaters who drift up and down, like chips in an eddy and never seem to get anywhere but are always tragic pictures of human misery like unto the shadows of the night who slink about old London bridge and the Thames Embankment. Down and outs seem to drift to the big cities where they can lose themselves among the teeming millions of folks who have no thought one of the other but are wrapped up solely in themselves and their own immediate concerns. Perhaps there may be some means of bringing these human derelicts back to a condition where they will be useful members of society, although outside of Jerry Macauley's famous slum missions very little progress has been made in that direction thus far, although many have attempted the task.

QUEBEC WOMEN TO BE HIGHLY FETED

Montreal, Que., April 2 (CP)—Those members of the Quebec legislature who voted in favor of admission of women to the Bar and for women suffrage at the present session are to be feted by the Province's women, for they will be invited to an affair organized in their honor by the League of Women's Rights. This event will probably take the form of a luncheon and is likely to be held at the end of April.

The now famous incident of the presentation of a bouquet of 43 roses to Premier Taschereau on his 43rd birthday, just after the woman suffrage bill had been defeated, was brought up at a recent meeting. Mrs. Casgrain read a letter of thanks from Mr. Taschereau in which he thanked the feminists to have been "good sports" and concluded them with the striking number of converts they had made. He thanked them for the roses and declared that he had not deserved them. "With that, I capitulagree," said Mrs. Casgrain, laughingly.

ASSERTS ONTARIO WOMEN SHOULD VOTE

Toronto, April 2 (CP).—The women of this province could elect any person they desired, and could dispose of nearly everything they wanted of their own accord, declared Mrs. Isaac U. E. Gibson, General Manager of the Toronto General Trusts Corporation Company, when he spoke at the sixth annual meeting of the Travellers' Aid Association.

Paying tribute to the splendid work of the Travellers' Aid at the many railway stations, the speaker also gave credit to those who had begun the work in London, New York and Toronto—in each case private individuals who had met the expense of the Travellers' Aid agent themselves. "I may say you get no assistance from the City or Government. If you want it you must ask for it," Mr. Gillen said. "You women could elect your own people if you wanted to, and there is only one woman in the House of Commons. Why have you not more? You have one woman in the Senate. I hope you will have more to say in this regard as in your work of helping the travelling public you would say pervery have faith, pray for them."

JAPAN ACCEPTS NAVAL FORMULA; PROGRESS MADE

Tokyo Government Expects Success Will Feature London Conference

TOKYO, April 1.—Japanese Government officials instructed its delegation in London to accept the Reed Matsudaira Naval formula without altering the tonnage figures but with reservations which it was authoritatively stated, should present no difficulties for early conclusion of the Tripartite Naval limitation pact. As a result of its decision, the Tokyo Government confidently expects success of the London conference, at least as far as Japan, Great Britain and the United States are concerned.

LONDON, April 1.—British Naval Conference spokesman announced today that "distinct progress was made during the past 24 hours toward final agreement by the naval delegations of Great Britain and to France. The announcement represented a distinct change from the gloom which prevaded the conference circles yesterday over the Anglo-French negotiations in which Great Britain has endeavored to satisfy the French desire for guaranteed security in exchange for a reduction of the French Naval programme.

TRENTON AND DISTRICT

STEEL BRIDGE AT SMITHFIELD TO BE ERECTED

Bridge Has Long Been Known as Real Danger Spot.

ACCIDENT SCENE

Trenton, April 2 (Special)—The news that the overhead bridge between Brighton and Trenton will be done away with this summer and a new and modern straight bridge erected will be hailed, with enthusiasm as the old structure, in spite of the shape of a S-curve, was a death-trap which had claimed both lives and property for years past.

Yesterday government surveyors were busy at the bridge, and reliable information is that the work of starting the new bridge will commence as soon as the weather permits. It will likely be well over a year, however, before the work is completed. No information as to whether the contract has been let could be ascertained here today.

River since motor traffic has become heavy on Ontario highways, the overhead bridge has been listed as a danger spot, and although a large number of warning signs have been erected on each side of the danger spot, each summer brings its toll of accidents, damage and once in a while, death. Last summer no fatalities occurred there, but at least seven accidents, mostly all owned by United States tour ists, came to grief. Local residents who realize the danger take pains to avoid accidents there, but strangers often crash through the fence, which is the only protection from a forty-foot drop.

TRENT RIVER IS FREED FROM ICE

Concretia Frozen in Canal Came Through Winter in Good Shape

(Special By Staff Reporter)

Trenton, April 2—The ice in the Trent River here has moved out into the Bay of Quinte and the river is clear right out to the first buoy in the bay. With another day or two of warm weather and a wind from the west, the bay, too will break up and move out, according to old-time residents who have watched the ice for years.

Although there are not many boats here over for the winter, the fleet owned by Robert Reid & Co. will be moved to Deseronto. Captain Martin is the only resident and pilot who will winter here. Several barges which are used in the coal carrying trade are also being made ready for their summer's work. Several officers of the Weddell fleet have arrived, as Cityborough on the Georgian Bay.

Workmen were busy today in cleaning up and repairing the Eben James Dock as the month of the river on the west side as it will be used this summer by the Canada Steamship Lines as a shipping base for canadian grain.

The Mail Bickem, one of the Weddell fleet, which went aground at Colpoys Light, near Desoronto, last fall, and was frozen in the ice, is still in the same position, and it will likely remain so, as it is understood that the damage done to it was greater than at first thought. The bottom is badly damaged, and it is leaking badly. It is thought that if the boat is taken off the bar where it is now resting it will sink. Captain Ben Bowen of Trenton was in charge of the ship when it went aground.

The government steamer Concretia, which was frozen in the ice at the east end of the Murray Canal here, fell to pieces, but has come through the winter in good shape. As soon as the ice breaks sufficiently, this boat will continue the work of picking up the buoys in Brighton Bay, which were was left unfinished last fall owing to the early freeze-up. Unless some of the buoys have torn loose from their anchorage and drifted with the ice pack, this should be completed within the next two weeks.

The Berlin police have prescribed the uniform for taxi drivers.

MARCH BUILDING IN TRENTON IS $16,365

Trenton, April 2 (Special)—Building permits issued by the Town Engineer here for the month of March show that $16,365 worth of building has been going on in that time, $1865.00 of this amount is for repairs to buildings already erected, while the other item of $14,500.00 is made up of three houses, valued at $3,500, $9,000.00 and $2,000.00 respectively. This is a most satisfactory showing for March, which is usually a poor month as far as building is concerned.

SOUTH AMERICA STORY IS TOLD

Rev. W. G. Martin M.P.P. is Speaker at Trenton Rotary

TRENTON, April 2—(Special)—Last night in the Trent Assembly Hall, the Trenton Canadian Club held its monthly meeting, with Captain Rev. W. G. Martin, M. P. P. or Brantford, as the guest speaker. Captain Martin is the member for Brantford in Provincial Legislature, and proved to be a really interesting speaker. He chose for his subject the country of South America, and titled "Across the Andes" held his listeners spell-bound for the full length of the program.

Mac. D. Rogers, president of the Trenton Canadian Club, acted as chairman, and the first number was a solo by Mr. Lloyd Corby, accompanied by Mr. H. B. Simonds, pianist. Although only a small number of persons were in attendance, the meeting was one of enthusiasm and Captain Martin was congratulated on all sides after his address was concluded

"South America is made up of 10 republics and three colonies, and covers over one eighth of the surface of the globe," Mr. Martin declared. "The major part of the country is still unexplored. There is a great deal of the Amazon Valley has recently been explored by white men." The speaker went on to say that Brazil, with its fine agricultural wealth, is one of the most progressive countries of the world while Paraguay, Uruguay and the Argentine Republic are today known, throughout the civilized world as the "Breadbasket of the World" enormous quantities of wheat are grown in these countries.

Peru is noted for its oil well's and its silver and copper mines. The speaker continued, while Bolivia, another republic, is noted for its bismuth, used extensively in medicine, as fell as tungsten, which is used for the making of electric lights.

The country of Peru has had rain only twice in the past fifty years, and the last rain was five years ago. The city of Lima, capital of Peru, was built by the great Spanish explorer, Pizarro, who built it seven miles from the sea so that they would not be troubled by pirates. Captain Martin, who visited the country a year ago, declared that although articles were seen there which were manufactured in Canada, Canadian goods were scarce. Not one was seen with the "Made in Canada" mark.

Canada will have a building at the Argentine Centenary Exhibition which is being held at Buenos Aires next year, the speaker announced. This will undoubtedly advertise Canada, although it is not a land composed entirely of ice and snow, as is the belief of thousands of South America think.

Rev. Mr. Martin, Captain Martin explained the industries of the country of Chile, mentioning that the revenue from the Nitrate fields in that country were greatly responsible for the head for every man, woman and child in the country. The talk was greatly appreciated by those in attendance and the thanks of the entire Trenton Canadian Club was tendered to the speaker.

HOSPITAL STAFF IS SEVERELY CENSURED

Edmonton, Alta., April 2 (CP) — At the Royal Alexandra Hospital an investigation of city-county methods in relation to patients fee has been undertaken by J. W. Hess who alleged that patients had been annoyed by the presence of office employees entering wards in efforts to make tin anti tion for hospitalization. "This is an institution for healing, not for profit, where sick people should be worried by collectors.

It contends that male collectors should not be allowed in the women's wards and annoy the patients in this manner. When the patients are in a nervous one, as in this case, such conditions are likely to prolong illness. It would be better, if information must be obtained from patients, to have a woman for the purpose. A woman's manner is much less likely to cause the patient to become excited.

Catherine McLeod, and Edith Pearson, both of Maxville, Ont., were candidates for examination. Most of the test was oral and the examiners were Dean Matheson, Dr. MacGillivray and Professor Fraser. No results have been issued to date, but it is understood that the standard attained was sufficiently high for an award to be made.

London, April 2—A girl of 22 years has just added the music world's fast beating composers of fame in a hundred golden competition for tone poem open to all existants of the London Academy of Music. She is Miss Gladys Cohen, the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Cohen, and cousin of Sir Robert Waley Cohen, and Mr. Montagu Lay Swathing. "My tone poem," she told an interviewer "was called 'Regret' and it is based on one of Grimm's fairy tales. I took between six and seven weeks, working sometimes six hours a day, to compose it, although it was only 12 minutes in play."

"Rapunzel" will probably have its first public performance by the British Broadcasting Corporation, Symphony Orchestra, which has played previous compositions of hers under her baton. Miss Cohen has been composing music since she was 11. "No, I am not engaged," she said emphatically to a question, "nor am I likely to be. Music keeps me very busy.

LONDON, Ont., April 2—Gordon Tennent, Permanent Returning Officer for London, has been notified to begin work on the preparation of the Federal voters lists, ad the enumerators will be ready for work by May 15. Canvassers will go to every house and place of business to secure names and there will be a Registrar for every two subdivisions in the city, Mr. Tennent said he did not take the order to prepare the lists as an indication that a Federal election is close, but in political circles generally the order is interpreted in this way.

SIX THOUSAND LICENSES

Registrar Kingston states that there are more cars per capita in the Limestone area than in any other place in Ontario. This is based on the fact that there were four thousand motor licenses issued. Mr. H. P. Ketch esen states that six thousand motor licenses have been issued here already and they expect that the number will not reach eight-thousand before many weeks. One thousand were issued in Kingston in the period of January, while four thousand were issued here. Belleville is the biggest city for distributing points for motor licenses in the Province of Ontario.

BRAZIL HAS "WHEAT WEEK"

SAO PAULO, Brazil—The recent coffee crisis has turned the thoughts of the Brazil State Government to other crops, especially to wheat.

The government has held here recently under auspices of state authorities, a wheat week, with scientific sessions of the State and seed wheat from the United States and Argentina shown.

Reports from the States in the South, where the climate is even more favorable to wheat raising, show that intensive campaign is being carried on for more extensive wheat growing. This campaign is expected to bring results with more planting in 1930 and greater crops.

No State in Brazil grows enough wheat to supply its own demands and imports, both of wheat, and of flour, are made both from the United States and Argentina.

ALERT LADIES' CLASS CONCERT

Local Talent Contributed Very Pleasing Numbers At Holloway Church

One of the most enjoyable concerts in some time was held in Holloway Street Church last night when a large crowd turned out and the proceeds were given to the church organ favor, as the rounds of applause testified. The concert itself was given under the auspices of the Alert Ladies' Bible Class and the Rev. R. G. Fenwick is the teacher and a considerable sum was realized. The program, arranged by Rev. R. S. Wight, pastor at Holloway Street Church, who acted as Chairman for the evening, was given in the form of talent. Mr. B. O. Frederick Belleville, had charge of the singing, and it was an old frame building with a large hall on the second floor. Bride Tells Her Secret

"FOR a young bride of twenty-one, I use to lose my vitality and high spirits, almost a nervous wreck," says Mrs. George E. Fillow, of Franklin, Va. "That, however," she continues, "is just what I did."

"I had only been married a few months to an athletic husband, who was ever everywhere and did everything. I tried to keep up with his pace, and simply collapsed under the strain. I became a really fit subject for sallow-skinned, depressed, and lifeless. Swimming, dancing, and golf I couldn't face them. When I began to lose my clear complexion, I was desperate.

"Then one day a girl friend came to pay me a visit. In the bottom of her little bag of clothes lay a crystal-clear bottle—Nujol! A short while-to-a-Nonnan talk—a telephone call to a neighboring drug store—and my future happiness was settled.

"That was a year ago. Now I too am never without Nujol, which has brightened and cleansed my body like a cake of pure soap. I eat, sleep, swim, and bike with the enthusiasm of a child. My complexion is all it used to be—and best of all—I am my husband's little pal again."

The wonderful thing about crystal-clear Nujol is that it is not a medicine; it confuse no drugs—it cannot hurt even a baby. It is simply the normal internal lubrication which your body needs. Let Nujol clear the poisons out of your body (we all have them), and flood the sunshine of happiness into your life.

It sounds like a fairy tale, but millions of people have proved it. So can you. Get Nujol at any drug store and only in sealed packages, with the Nujol trademark. It costs but a few cents and it will make you feel like a million dollars!

URGES MOTHERS TO CHOOSE ROYAL NAMES FOR BABES

(Canadian Press)

Toronto, April 2.—Miss Jean Graham has given a practical demonstration of the subject names, said Medicine Hat had been immortalized by Kipling, and when the Government was asked to advice about changing the name he received a letter from Kipling himself, should think very long before changing her name."

"But a name does mean something," Miss Graham said, "and I suppose you would call her daughter Jezebel? What father would call his son Caligula or Nero? Names do have a bearing upon the child. Why christen a baby William Shakespeare? It is a name of great weight to carry on his young shoulders. Some parents have the peculiar ambitions of names as "Ima Jane Bag" or as one Missouri man christened his baby, or "Polly Cracker," Hollar Hardon Lucas Bell."

Miss Graham made a strong appeal for the preservation of the "royal names" in the country. "There is a romance to the British Empire; and for the continuation of the beautiful and historic names which suggest history, literature and romance."

WILL TEST SOIL FOR FERTILITY

Determine What Varieties of Grain Possible In Section

A determined effort to find the best grade of seed suitable to the Bay of Quinte district will be made shortly, however, under the auspices of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. Monday afternoon representatives of 8 counties, Hastings, Prince Edward, Lennox and Addington, Durham and Northumberland and Peterborough assembled at the office of Walter Brown, Department of Agriculture, in Brighton, on the invitation of representatives of the plan.

Oats, which have not been the best that they might in this district, will be concentrated on that crop. Certain areas of ground will be set aside in each county for the purpose of experimentation. A little plot of land will be planted four varieties of oats, Alaska, Banner, 77 and the local brand and it can then be determined just what variety grows best in the respective counties Although it has not yet been definitely decided where experiments will be carried out in Hastings county, it is probable that Stirling will be chosen. Walter Brown, agricultural representative, is assisted.

Better Type of Grain.

Barley, too, will be concentrated with Choice, selected seed from the O.A.C. will be planted in comparison with local seed. Different types of fertilizers will be tried so that local farmers can find out the best kind to use for oats. The idea of the experiments is to find the best grain that can be grown in this district. It is the first time that such experiments have been carried out in East Hastings, and, under the direction of competent authorities from the Department of Agriculture, should prove successful.

The director from O.A.C. was to have been in Brighton yesterday to address the delegates to the meeting which was called by Harry Pearson, secretary of the Quinte district Agricultural association, but he was unable to get away from his duties at the college and the meeting had to be conducted without his presence.

Representing the county of Hastings at the convention yesterday were Ray Ketcheson, Tweed, and Walter Brown of this city. From Prince Edward County were T. W. Crombeer of Bloomfield, Clemenson and Morris Huff, president of the Prince Edward County Agriculture, Durham and Northumberland were represented by J. Y. Eshlebaugh, W. Smith, while J. S. Nelson and W. T. Waterman represented the County of Lennox.

Experiments will be started this spring, and Agricultural and Horticultural oats alone will probably be concentrated on. It is the intention in the other seasons to carry on similar experiments with other kinds of grain.

RODDEN WILL COACH HAMILTON AGAIN

Hamilton, April 2.—M. J. (Mike) Rodden, coach of the Toronto Varsity Globe, Toronto, who has coached Hamilton Tigers to two Grand Championships and three Big Four titles in three football seasons, has doubled the ship again next fall.

Appointment of Rodden was made by the Tiger Executive Committee last night, and it was a wise stroke of business, for he has proved a great success and is very popular in this city.

Under the agreement, which the 1929 season. Rodden hinted that he would not be able to coach Tigers in 1930, but he has arranged to be back and the Ancaster Tigers can consider themselves fortunate.

Over the week-end Secretary Dowd of the Western Canada Rugby Union was a visitor in the city, and he and the Tiger officials conferred over the proposed trip West of the Dominion Champions. Considerable will be published in the matter of clearing up details, and the question of the Tiger camp is that the long journey will prove worth while.

Toronto Serbian Says He Was Taken for a Ride and Severely Beaten

Toronto, April 2.—A story of being forced by two armed men to open his safe and hand over a thousand dollars in currency, and then being taken for a "ride" in his own car from which he was later ejected at a downtown intersection was related to the police today by Hanna Phillips, Serbian cafe owner. Phillips is at present under medical care here after being closely questioned by the police. The men, he said, are known to him, and accused his confidence by seeking advice regarding passage to their homeland.

The incident was first reported to the police early today by two milk delivery drivers who were in Phillips' restaurant when he came staggering in. He told them he had been robbed and beaten by two bandits, whom he said had entered the premises late last night under the pretense of seeking further advice regarding passage. Two hours after the police had been notified, the car was discovered by a constable, undamaged.

PETERBORO WON FROM BELLEVILLE COLLEGIATE TEAM

Trenton Students Won Bay of Quinte Championship by One Point

Last night the Belleville Collegiate Institute senior quintet defeated the Peterboro senior squad 38-36.

The large number of collegiate supporters who turned out witnessed a thrilling game of high grade basketball. This year Belleville Collegiate Institute have been represented by some of the best teams in the different branches of sports that ever wore the black, red stripe, and scarlet and the basketball team is no exception.

The collegiate team started the game with a burst of speed which was not to be denied. Calter the versatile collegiate forward opened the scoring with a pretty basket after receiving a pass from Ridley. From then till the end of the first half the collegiate squad dominated the greater part of the play. A short passing game combined with speedy rushes on the part of McPee, Ridley and Symons gave the collegiate quintet a lead of ten points to carry into the second half of the game.

In the second half the Peterboro team came within striking distance of the home team. Rowdy the star of the Peterboro squad broke through the collegiate defence who seemed completely bottled by his phenomenal dribbling and close in shots. The collegiate team then came back with a four man offensive which enabled them to emerge the victors. Ray Bid ser's aggressiveness defensively and offensively in this period was a great help in squelching the attack of the lift-kick team.

The return game will be played in Peterboro the first of next week and Mr. Cutler has every right to believe that his team will come through with a win. The collegiate if successful in obtaining the most points on the round will be the champions of Central Ontario.

The lineups were:

Peterboro Collegiate — rf. Rowtly, lf. Wakefield, c. MacDonald, capt., rain, rg. Glover, lg. Stanger, subs. Preston, Wragg and Armstrong.

Belleville Collegiate — rf. Calter, lf. Ridley, c. McPee, capt., rg. Bryce, lg. Mott, subs. Smith, Higgs, Williams, Sharaska and Bradley.

Referee—Albert Armstrong.

Mr. Stickwood the Trenton coach is responsible for the good showing made by his team. The Trenton squad has practiced three nights a week for the last month, and their game last night showed that they could handle the ball and pivot just as well. If not better the nine collegiate juniors.

Afterwards the captain of the Trenton quintet played brilliantly through out and combined with Wenger was a many beautiful baskets. At half time the Trenton squad were leading 14-13. In the second half they proceeded to strengthen their lead only to have it dwindled to one point again in the later part of the game. During this period Blakely the captain and pivot man of the junior collegiate team combining with Tobe and Marsales did some splendid team work and just failed to overtake the Trenton squad. Bradley and Goodman also played well for the collegiate.

This game was exciting in the extreme, the collegiate gymnasium at times was so filled with the cheers of the supporters that the referee's whistle was scarcely audible.

The Trenton team called time out with only ten seconds to play, and after the last minute interval the collegiate did not have opportunity to score the necessary basket.

The lineups were:

Trenton Juniors — rf. Aylsworth, captain, lf. Wenyss, c. J. Taylor, rg. Bowles, lg. Johnston, subs. Harris, Dolan, Minkin, Corbett and Sutton.

Belleville Collegiate Juniors — rf. Blakely, captain, lf. Marsales, c. Tobe, rg. Bray, lg. Goodman, subs. Morrison, Mercer, Schmeirow, Ferguson, Orilla and Tobe.

HEARD TO SAIL LIPTON'S VESSEL

Tollesbury, Eng., April 2—A son of this little fishing and yachting village in Essex is the master of the Blackwater has been chosen to sail Sir Thomas Lipton's America Cup challenger, Shamrock V.

He is Captain Jack Heard. Hailves say that there is no better hand at handling a yacht on this side of the Atlantic.

"I was racing at 18 in the old Creek," Heard said. "At 23 I sailed as an A. B. in Sir Thomas Lipton's Shamrock III. That was in 1909. In 1914 I was in the Shamrock IV, as first mate but no race came off owing to the war. In 1920 I was again first mate under Sir William Burton. He won two out of the five test races."

In four seasons from 1924 to 1927 as skipper of the Mischief, Heard says he won 118 prizes in 137 races, and in 1928 and 1929 in the Astra he won six out of eight events.

Others selected are Mrs. Helen Wills Moody and Helen Jacobs. It is considered a foregone conclusion that Edith Cross and Mrs. Lawrence A. Pepper will be chosen. Miss Palfrey's sister, Mlanne, will also go to the Old Country to take part in the All-English Championships and other tournaments.

LEAFS DRIVEN AT TOP SPEED

Manager Steve O'Neill Not at all Pleased with Toronto's Showing

Tarpon Springs, April 1—Hitting or rather lack of that baseball commodity in the line-up of the Leafs as they battled Brooklyn in two games on Sunday failed to please Manager Bid Steve Francis O'Neill, the team guiding genius.

But when expressing his dissppointment over the offensive power shown by his men, O'Neill credited Danny Vance and Jumbo Elliott with hurling good ball in the second game and he also drew attention to the fact that the National Leaguers themselves were not so hot with the ash. They, too, ran into good pitching.

Just the same the Toronto players were given orders to be on the field in uniform not later than 10.30 and they were kept there until 1.30. The three hours were wholly given to batting practice, with 11 of the 14 pitchers on the staff each taking a turn at doing the throwing.

Paul Snills, slow ones and all kinds of twisters by right handers and south paws were tossed at the batsmen and if they do not show some benefit from that lengthy workout when they play the House of David team tomorrow it will be a strange thing indeed.

Nick Harrison, Clarey Fisher and Sam Gibson were exempted from mound duties in the batting practice, Harrison and Fisher being slated to pitch against the brotherly gentlemen. O'Neill will use the regular line-up in this game.

Special Appearance

The long session marked the first appearance on the pitching throne of the veteran Wally Leverenz and Josh Billings since the camp opened. Leverenz, who is 41 years of age, but hale and hearty, has been bothered with a scandhe nowfee nahs N ndingi me soreness in his legs, but it has disappeared upon the feels and local fine, though his arm, on his own says, is not yet going enough to warrant his working in a game. It will be some time before the aged southpaw will be given the word to go.

Billings, whose arm gave him trouble last season and in 1928, did not endeavor to put much speed in his serves, and afterwards said that his salary wing was none the worse for the light strain put on it. But he refused to commit himself as to whether he thinks he will be able to do any pitching this Summer.

The Leafs were about their business this morning under a hot sun. It was just about the best day they have had in a week or more, and they made the most of it, keeping on the move throughout the three hours.

Recreation Alleys

The Lucky Strike and Hydro met in Ladies Junior game at the Recreation Alleys last night and the Lucky Strike took three points to the opposition's one. F. Walden was high bowler for the Luck Strike with a total of 235. She had two nice singles of 200 and 209. H. Rowbotham also had 209 for the Hydro M. Symons was best with 444.

In a Group A Junior game played last night the Hardware took three points to the Buick's one. Barrings lily in the line-up of the Leafs as they battled Brooklyn in two games on Sunday failed to please Manager Bid Steve Francis O'Neill, the team guiding genius.

BRUINS FAVORED TO WIN SERIES

First Game of World's Championship at Boston Tonight

Boston, Mass., April 1—Today is April 1, and Montreal Canadiens figure on fooling all the hockey experts and also the Bruins of Boston. The teams clash in the Garden here tonight in the first game of the best-two-out-of-three-game series for the Stanley Cup, emblematic of the professional hockey championship of the world. The Bruins, present holders of the old silver mug, are heavy favorites to defeat the Montreal sextette, but the result is by no means a foregone conclusion to those who have followed the fortunes of the challengers in the past ten days.

The Garden authorities rushed arrangements for the game as soon as the result of the New York game was flashed to them, and already the fans here are scurrying about for tickets. Tonight there will be an overflow crowd. The second game of the world series will be played in Montreal on Thursday evening, with the third game if it is necessary on Saturday here at the Garden. In communication with Canadian amateur hockey officials last night, Manager Art Ross suggested that the first two games be played here, but the rival parties could not agree.

Canadiens are in eminently high spirits and in good shape. Despite the gruelling games they have undergone, they appeared unbeatable but jaded against New York Rangers.

Bruins Has Clarey Fisher

Most of the players will be in top shape for the opening struggle. Howie Morenz is still suffering from a charley horse, and was limping badly today, while Aubert, another star was still bothering him somewhat.

But under the skilful hands of the trainer they are expected to be in fair shape for the struggle. The remainder of the teams have no physical complaints to make.

Boston Bruins, battered somewhat after their hectic series with Montreal Maroons, which was long and gruelling, are all set for the battle. Several of the players are still nursing bruises. Hitchman's jaw and Gagnon's elbow being the most prominent injuries, but the Bruins are considered ready. Both Hitchman and Gainor will play, it is understood, by, who was also battered somewhat in the Maroon struggle, will take his place. Although they have rested up since the last Maroon game, it seems that the Boston club is still feeling somewhat out of sorts.

ATLANTA WIZARD LEADS TOURNEY

Bobby Jones Won Augusta Trophy With Brilliant Score of 284

Augusta, Ga., April 2.—With a gallery of more than 2,500 stampeding in the wake of Bobby Jones, the amateur open champion from Atlanta, yesterday shot two brilliant rounds of golf, shattering golf and won the Southeast Open golf tournament by the aggregate of 284 strokes.

The nation's leading amateur, who leaves late this month for England with the Walker Cup team, led the field of professionals and amateurs played by 12 strokes.

Second place came Horton Smith; Cragston, N.Y., professional, with 297.

Smith Takes Prize

Smith's score enabled him to collect the $1,000 prize money offered to the professional who could match par for the 72 holes played.

The young Cragston, N.Y., moneymaker beat the Atlanta golfing barrier by one stroke in their battle at Cavannish in February. But in the resumption of their duel here yesterday and today Jones gave his young rival a lesson in the finer points of the game. Bobby was four strokes ahead of Horton's 72 holes at the 54 holes play, and stretched his lead to 13 today as he turned in brilliant rounds of 69 and 71.

JONES TURNS IN TWO PAR ROUNDS

Bobby Leads Field in Southeastern Open by Three Strokes

Augusta, Ga., April 1—Showing perfect figures for the first two rounds of the $5,000 Southeastern open golf tournament here, Bobby Jones last night led the field of nearly 100 golfers with his team mates and a four stroke lead over his rival, Horton Smith. It was the second meeting of the year for Jones and Smith. A gallery of 2,000 followed them through two rounds over the difficult par 72 hole course at the Country Club. Smith beat the Atlanta golfing barrister by one stroke in their battle at Savannah last February.

Had "Calamity Jane" been functioning smoothly yesterday Jones would have had an even greater lead over the field. With five errors on his drives were long and straight and his approach shots were true, but he missed more than a dozen putts of average distances. On one hole he was forced to use three putts before he could find the cup.

Tied for fourth place at the end of the first round, Bobby started out bad by bogeying the first two holes in the afternoon, and then tightened up to shoot brilliant golf throughout the rest of the day. A birdie three on the sixteenth and a misjudged putt on the same hole for a bogey six cut his only over-par score of the round, after the wobbly start.

Smith, playing the course for the first time, was three over par for the morning round, but shot steadily for a 73 in the afternoon round.

Jimmy Thomson, former national open champion from Shamaroneck, and Tyson Kerrigan, Shenzer, N. J., who led the first round with a 70, were tied for second place at the end of the day, three strokes behind Jones' record. In a bad start on the fifteenth hole of the second round, Farrell made a nine, tied Jones for the lead.

Smith was alone in fourth place 1684 for his efforts, while Joe Turpin, of Columbia, Crawford, N. Y., was two strokes further away with 150. Three players entered the list of Willmington, Del. Whiffy Cox, Brookline, and Tyre Sharpe, of Greenville, N. Y., had cards of 152. Billy Burke of Glenview protested 151. Gene Sarazen, who shot a great par round this morning took 81 strokes during the afternoon and found himself far to the rear with 154.

CANADIENS WON FROM BOSTON 3:0

Ledue, Mantha and Lepine Are Scorers for Brilliant Frenchmen

Boston, Auril 2.—The Canadiens of Montreal, brilliant, surprising, dastardly, took a step toward regaining the sagging group of Boston Bruins before 14,000 fans in the Garden gardens last night. They defeated the Boston Bruins 3 to 0 in the first game of the challenge series for the Stanley Cup, and now stand in a greater away way from the trophy of trophies. Alex (Battleship) Ledue and Sylvio Mantha were the heroes of the contest, with the big guns in the attack of the redclothed Frenchmen.

In the dying minutes of the third, with the Bruins all up in the air, Ledue broke away from the defense on the left wing and brought the first goal. Mantha to Pete Lepine beat a lone Boston defender down the ice and Pete's whipping low drive to the far corner accounted for the total of the Canadiens.

Throughout the opening period a staunch Canadien defense gave a four man Bruin attack every chance to speed and hopeless, the Bruins kept trying, but their efforts lacked punch and dash that carried them through in the second stanza when they made two defeats.

Ledue in the dying minutes of the second period, with the Canadiens leading by two goals, did the Bruins play their first decisive blow. Perfect. For a stretch of five minutes or more the Bruins flashy swarmed through the French defense, beating the flying Reds at the checking game and the Habsworth Stars.

In that period of stress, Hainsworth rose to new heights of goal-tending skill, performing miracle after miraculous t irrent of the hard-pressed Canadiens.

Only at that time did the Boston team outplay the visiting contingent. In the first period, Howie Morenz, Mrs. Morenz, purporting to be handicapped by a "Charley horse", rapped over the ice like a fury. On more than one occasion "They" Thompson saved shots from him that were labelled.

Having managed a scoreless tie in the second period, the Canadiens, after a defensive demonstration in the final period that has not been surpassed in Boston this season. Meanwhile the Royal Boston stood in the flatuseas of gallery and stadium accompanied the festivities with cries of "In the bag!" and even stooped at times to booing the Boston club shouts for the gore of Referee Mallon and Herdman were continuous; and the third period, however, Bobby Shore was banished for a palpable jab on Wilder Larochelle, the fans thereupon, refuse and one derby hat over the ice.

As soon as the game was over Cecil Hart, genial manager of the visitors, jumped the rail and ran across in an effort to secure the puck. Referee Mallinson had handed it to Ledue and as the players milled through the exit Hart caught up with the "Battleship" and engaged him in jovial and excited conversation.

Both Bruins and Canadiens were idle tonight, but leave in the morning for Montreal, where they will meet in the second game of the two-out-of-three series, on Thursday.

INDIANS RECOVER WIN IN OVERTIME

Port Evie, April 2.—Cleveland took the lead last night in the finals for the International Hockey League title, defeating Syracuse 4 to 3 in overtime overtime. The winning goal was scored by Captain Alex Gray with only five seconds left of the first extra period. The Indians, after being down the entire third period, came back with a winning punch and played the Bisons almost to a standstill, tieing up the count in less than five minutes. In the third period both teams were tiring fast from the grueling pace set earlier in the game but the Indians had the necessary drive to hold off the Bison attacks and to present a threat at all times. Breaks of the game favored the visitors in a contest which was remarkable for its clean play, considering what was at stake.

Bisons Draw First Blood

In the first period the Bisons had the best of the play, and only phenomenal work by Moore kept the Thundering Herd from notching more than two goals. Syracuse outplayed a called on to save several dangerous shots. Yoss lined up the red light for the Bisons when he netted the puck after bringing it out from behind the net, and taking a pass from Cross. Gray evened the count within two minutes in the second period, when his long shot got by the blue line. The period both teams were tiring fast from the grueling pace set earlier in the game but the Indians had the

VALUE OF TRADE OF TOURISTS IS BANKER'S THEME

C. E. Neill of Montreal, of Royal Bank Directorate Speaks

The continued growth and success of the bank primarily depends upon the prosperity of the trade and industry of the country. It is in trade rather than in the great manufacturing industries where there is a definite threat of a recession during the coming year. Therefore, it is in the field of trade that definite constructive measures are likely to prove most helpful. In a day when improved efficiency is reducing the costs of manufacture and where large scale production is lowering the ratio of overhead there is some tendency to forget the importance of the distribution of goods as a part of the country's economic activity. At present, the cost of manufacturing activities only about 50 per cent of the ultimate selling price of the many articles of manufacture which come into the channels of retail distribution. Recent scientific studies have convincingly evidenced how balanced inventories and rapid turnover constitute the efficiency of wholesale and retail trade. If the volume of sales can be increased, added prosperity will accrue to the merchant and the resultant reduction in price will add to the buying power of the consumer. It is particularly true in the case of luxuries that the margins of profit in distribution are sufficient so that it is more profitable for a country to be engaged in the distribution than it is to produce such goods for sale in other countries.

As a definite movement in the direction of trade organization let Canada become known as the country where the tourist from the United States may purchase Canadian products in merchandise at lower prices than are feasible in a country of protective tariffs. The Geographic location of the United States has given Canada an opportunity to develop the art of skilled merchandising in a manner that does not exist on a similar scale in other countries.

It is conceded that tourists from the United States spend about ..one hundred million dollars in Switzerland, one hundred and fifty million dollars in Italy, and about two hundred and fifty million dollars in France during 1929. In France, where it is the tradition to buy luxuries, wearing apparel, and art products, the annual value of the tourist trade is greaters than in any other country in Europe. The French government has decided a reportedly more than one hundred million dollars per annum for advertising the attractions of the country to the American tourist trade. In Germany the government appropriation for this same purpose is substantially large than in France. These appropriations constitute tangible evidence of governmental recognition of receipts from tourists as important items in their national income.

With due recognition of the importance of the tourist trade in Europe, it must be conceded that Canada holds first place among the playgrounds of the world. The scenic scenery of the Canadian Rockies, the lakes and rivers of Central Canada, the historic landmarks and traditions of Quebec and the summer resorts of the Maritime Provinces are attracting appreciating millions visitors a year. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics has estimated that these visitors spent two hundred and fifty million dollars in the country in 1928, and in 1929 the total must have been close to three-hundred million dollars. It is estimated that only about sixty million dollars of this sum, or less than eighty per capita, was spent for goods which were taken from the country.

That great annual migration presents an unparalleled opportunity for increasing our trade. As yet there has been no concerted effort to build the tradition that there are purchases which can be made in Canada more advantageously than in the United States. It is estimated that in France, the amount of sale to each visitor averages about $700. If we could make purchasing in Canada sufficiently attractive so that the average value of the merchandise taken out of the country by each visitor amounted to less than one-sixth of this sum, it would make a difference of more than one billion dollars a year in our trade.

This is a subject worthy of concerted effort by the National and Provincial Governments, Boards of Trade and Tourist Bureaus throughout the country. If individual Europeans and Orientals can spend only two or three hundred thousand dollars a year and afford to spend one to five million dollars in national advertising, the situation in Canada would justify an advertising budget much in excess of that amount.

In order to create a general interest in buying in Canada, these standard articles in many lines of merchandise that could be bought at as low a price in Canada as in any other country. When visitors return to the United States and show their friends the bargains which they purchased in Canada, they will be in a state of mind to condition that such purchasing is an essential part of a trip to Canada. The opportunity to buy in Canada will become an additional inducement which will serve to attract an increasing number of visitors.

There is strong sentiment in Canada in favour of the promotion of tourist trade, where such trade does not hamper the normal expansion of Canadian industry. The tourist trade of Canada might well afford an outlet for a large volume of British goods of which not one cent produced now finds the Dominion. The British manufacturer and exporter has failed to realize that the Canadian market is destined for reaching the attention of fifteen million American purchasers, as well as those of ten million Canadians. The export advantageous preferential tariff on Irish linens, for instance, permits them to be used as a display item which should attract this type of attention. The use of items of British origin as leaders should constitute a means for increasing the sale of allied Canadian products.

It will require large-scale advertising to make visitors from the United States realize the many articles which are now or may in the near future be produced on the free list in Canada, can be bought in the country at prices substantially below those which they have to pay in their own country. Such advertising and such merchandising can agree among themselves in such a way that might make the government to place certain specific articles on the sign origin on the free list with a view to making such items as leaders in the promotion of the sale of allied classes of goods of Canadian manufacture.

In instances where goods of similar but not identical character in the country, certain articles can be placed on the free list with the deliberate purpose of increasing the purchasing power of the tourist trade. The power to admit foreign goods of this character to the market should give the government, greater bargaining power with other governments. When foreign powers realize the extent of this new market in Canada, they may we'l agree to give preferences on Canadian products in return for the opportunity to display their goods to fifteen million visitors from the United States.

In the past, the Canadian manufacturer has had to contend with small volume as a handicap in his production costs. In a number of industries far-sighted co-operation with manufacturers in other lines might bring about a volume of sales which would compare favourably with the volume attained in similar lines in Europe. In many European countries there are a surplus of highly skilled artisans employed in the production of souvenirs that visitors take back as presents to their friends. This project opens up the possibility of employment for skilled artisans and hand-workers in Canada.

As a natural prelude to the movement to increase buying in Canada there should be a concerted effort to build more adequate hotels and hostelries for tourist accommodation. The hotels in our large cities and in the tourist resorts are, in the main, excellent. In small towns and villages the lack of adequate accommodation is deplorable. Many of the most attractive parts of this country are unknown because they have no facilities to house visitors. There should be sufficient local pride to instal upon proper accommodation for visitors. Those towns and cities which are well located with reference to tourist travel can increase their wealth by making it more attractive to "Buy in Canada."

MEN NO MORE VAIN THAN 60 YEARS AGO

(Canadian Press)

TORONTO, April 2.—Men do not seem to be any more vain of their personal appearance today than they were sixty years ago, when Charles Dickens died and the Franklin War closed, the gallants of the period had their moustaches carled by irons and curling papers, and then waxed and generally ornamented. In 1929 they don't wear flowery moustaches any more, but they do have mad packs for their complexions and clever treatments for their hair, and eagerly seek the attentions of the manicurist. So Says William S. Forsyth, who ought to know, for he has been a barber himself for 60 years.

RADIO ROMANCE OF WORLD TRADE

Charles Brown Addresses Kiwanis Club on Marvel of Age

Drawing for a complete radio donated by the De Forest Crosley Radio Company and Kiwanian Carl Read, dealer in this district and a very good address on the growth of radio since its inception by Charles Brown, radio manager of the De Forest Crosley, made the weekly luncheon of the Kiwanis Club yesterday at the Queen's Hotel one of the most memorable e. Kiwanian Frank Hinchey was the holder of the lucky ticket and received a radio valued at $165.00 for the small sum of fifty cents. The Victorian Order of Nurses were the recipients of the generosity of the club to the extent of $51.36, this being the amount collected for the tickets sold. The speaker for the day was Kiwanian Wilmer Carl Read and Kiwanian appreciation was engraved by Sawyer Dixon.

Mr. Brown in opening his address stated that the romance of business was the growth of radio. The first transmission was sent by Marconi in 1896 and today radio stations are established in every city of importance, with nearly every home equipped with a receiving set. What the future holds for this business no one at the time seems to know. Most likely homes will be lit, without the aid of wires and homes will be heated by radio. Television is the latest wonder with other innovations in the near future. The first message sent by Marconi to transmit was by means of dots and dashes, and these messages were heard a distance of 300 yards. With his partner Marconi came to England and interested the Post Office department and they were carried out on Salisbury Plains and in 1898 a wireless station was established at Poldhu. In 1901 Marconi attempted to span the Atlantic ocean and came to Newfoundland. On Dec. 12th of that year, after four days of patient waiting during which up the set, the three te'egraph dots of the letter S" was flashed across space. Believing that the public would discredit his story he did not tell of the experiment until four days later.

"From 1901 to 1910", said the speaker "wireless progressed in marine circles and in 1910, 850 vessels were equipped with wireless telegraphy. What benefits have incurred from the annihilation of space by wireless was shown in the sinking of the Titanic, that would have been saved, when ships floundered in mid-ocean. Being was the first taken over by Marconi to send out his S.O.S. from a distressed ship and has been received wherever marine men gather. In 1910 the United States made it compulsory that every passenger steamer to be equipped with wireless, but that step was taken by England some years previous. In 1912 the red net work of telegraph was formed and encircled the globe and shortly afterwards radio telephone, when the vacuum tube was founded." Dealing with the period of the war, the speaker showed what a help the radio was to the Allies and fleets of the air. During this period the Alexanderson high frequency converter was created, which did much to revolutionize radio.

After the war The Radio Corporation of America was founded and in 1919, the General Electric Company founded the first radio station for the purpose of cast of a concert. Immediately there was a stampede of the public to get small sets to pick up this reception and concerts from the United States assured fact. In January of 1921 the first service was sent over the air by a radio later from Pittsburg. In 1922 there were 400,000 receiving sets in use and radio parts and 1,200 factories and last year there was a revenue of $650,000,000.00 from radio. The took the Bell Telephone Company 45 years to accomplish as much and the Radio Company 39 years, but a? this has been done in radio in the past five years.

603 MEN SEEK SHELTER IN TRENTON OVER 3 MONTH PERIOD

Clever Young Cartoonist Amuses Self By Sketching on the Walls

Although Belleville has had an impressive army of vagrants who have asked for it night's lodging in the police station, some six hundred and thirty since the first of last July, Trenton, a town just half its size, need not take a back seat when it comes to the question of hospitality for these knights of the road. For the months of January, February and March there failed in the Trenton police record exactly six hundred and three men transients who sought and got some shelter from the cold, and not crimson.

Last night there were but four, all of them work and hungry for it, slightly the worse for wear. They had come to the country being the land of opportunity," one youngster declared, and, why he has been in this country from England two years and had little or no work during that time, "but I can't see it. I come from Hamilton and am now on my way back there after trying to find work all over the province. I'm just law? to be had. We get our meals by begging or borrowed money. Sometimes we go up to the back door of a farm house the town and the residences strictly alone or we would get thirty dirs for begging? and if they don't turn the dog loose on us they're lucky enough to get one scrap. It is rarely that they give us anything. One farmer offered me a job. But no for my board. After I had been there for three months, he said I would be paid five dollars a month and my board. Naturally he would pay me the munificent sum of ten dollars a month. Nevertheless this youth from the old country, who never contributed an unused himself by sketching remarkable caricatures of his companions in idlness, says he doesn't want to remain in Canada. He says he is England there are millions out of work.

Almost Starving

Several months of even looking for work to the eyes of a hard-hearted policeman's message Adler said last night, "to see some of the boys who have spent a night's rest. A number of them are almost starving and unable to beg any longer for a night's lodging.

One reason, it is thought, for the large number of men looking for work that have struck Trenton this winter is that the new airport is being built there and men have the idea that there is work for any number of common laborers This is an erroneous idea as anyone who gave a visit to the site can see for himself. Although there are workers there, the time has not yet come when they will have to be imported from out of the two centres, Belleville and Trenton. Sufficient labour can be found in these towns for some time yet, it is estimated.

Girl Unafraid

The Tragedy of a Woman Who Defied Convention in the Name of Love

By Gladys Johnson

Ardeth Marks Tone

The warm optimism of youth flowed back with the thought: "Maybe the doctor isn't right about Mother. Symptoms have been mistaken before." He hurried. Drew her to him with rough tenderness. "We'll make things come right, Mother."

They parted on that note.

Spring merged into weeks. Autumn filled Hillcrest. Ardeth felt that she moved through a dream. She was holding her breath, but she woke.

The shop filled her days, for Jeanette was beginning school with her new baby. It was only the gossip of the smokeria which brought Jeanette down each day.

It was August when she had the real word of the hotel: Jeanette selling now but buying—selling to put the bills and the checks at each end of the month.

In the evenings there were little inexpensive dinners with Ken. There were long rides down the highway through the grim, star-filled nights.

When Ken, could not be with her she stayed quietly in her own room, sometimes reading, more often sewing on some flimsy pink trifle which later would be laid away in the bottom bureau drawer.

Two Cerbet Persists

A steadily growing stack of dainty underthings were here. Some nights Ardeth would sit back on her heels, eyes like stars, while she lifted the tissue paper and gloated over them. The beginning of her modest trousseau . . . It seemed, in some mysterious way, to hasten the time when she and Ken could be married.

Now and then a note of osgged hope in his voice. Then Corbett passed and asked her to go out with him to dinner—to a show.

Gentle finality in her refusal, but almost gloried in this chance to show her loyalty to Ken. Happier to sit alone like this, in the quiet little room perched high above the city, than to go out with soulless ease.

There was comfort in the thought. It was, she thought defiantly, as the she were earning the right to her happiness.

On a day, when rain lashed Grant avenue and machines slid uncertainly by the glass panelled front door of The Caprice, Tom Corbett entered the shop.

From his smokerie came the voices of Cecile and Jeanette and the inaudible cameo of Cyril Underhill's drawl. Tom scowled and carefully avoided the open doorway. He disliked the smokerie.

Walking over to Ardeth, and speaking in a cautiously low voice, he regarded his gray felt hat, stained black and shapeless by moisture.

Raining cats and dogs. Good thing, though. Rain here means snow up in the mountains. I heard from a fellow who lives in the small town near my cabin up there. Says they had a fine fall last week." His brown eyes, with a little shyness in the girl. "Mary say anything to you yet?"

Her astonished gaze met his squarely. "Mary? Mary Eastwood? No. About what?"

Tom scratched his head like a baffled youngster. "Whaw. Put my foot in it again, didn't I. Well, she will see, Mary's going to charge across a bunch I've invited up to my mountain cabin for a week end. You're included. Mary said she was going to speak to you."

When the girl opened her lips to speak Tom's words flowed a little faster.

"Going to refuse, aren't you? Got to be a big party. Don't turned you down?"

He grinned but there was something hurt and wistful in his eyes. "Save your breath this time; he's coming for you. Oh, don't try to look so innocent and surprised. You know I mean old Ken."

"Why—he—didn't say—"

Tom's grin was a trifle thin. "Sure. I invited him to get you up there."

Ardeth felt her cheeks burn. "Oh, of course! How regular I am! And I tried to jeer. "Anyway, in spite of your good scheming, I can't go. Jeanette needs me. Someone has to be here in the shop."

Mary Takes a Hand

"I've talked that all over with Jeanette," stated Tom. "See you're free, you in a corner. "It's just a week-end party. Most of us are leaving Friday. But you can come up with Fred Eastwood on Saturday. How does that suit you?"

Her lips were dancing and he read her delight in the deepened wine of her cheeks. Something flamed in the man's eyes.

"You're a darling!" he said, reverently, then took scarcely time to be intended to be examining a chiffon scarf sewn with gold pearls as a customer came in.

When Mary Eastwood came into the shop later in the day she came directly to the girl behind the case.

"Tom told me he spoke to you. He really has a jolly little cabin and we're going to rough it. Get our own meals, you know. No servants. Fred and I will be chaperones. Phyllis Hawkins, Art Meade-Duvals are the other guests. Clarence and Bill Lade are coming and Tom—that's all."

Then in her own direct way, Mary looked off to the girl before her curiously.

"You clever little devil—do you know what they're saying? Mrs. Arden-Smythe just pull that baby stare on me! You've got one of the most eligible men in the city dangling, and I've never seen old Tom like this before with a girl."

"Oh—that's imagination," Ardeth began in confusion, but Mary turned to her other's eyes.

"Don't be silly!" said Mary Eastwood severely. "And don't tence with me. I know what it is to work—and to be poor too. Thing is, you're in love. He's a fool, Ardeth."

Disgusted at you mean" The wide amber eyes came to rest on Mary's steady dark gaze, and there was a glint of fear in the girl's look.

Mary shrugged. Her voice was kindly. "You know what I mean. I'm afraid those cards are stacked, Ardeth. Not that I'm meddling further; I've talked too much as it is! Let's talk about nothing. Even in warmth; you'll need hiking things if you're going to have any fun in the snow."

Her last words were lost on the girl. Ardeth was watching Mary Eastwood with a wistfulness which hurt the older woman.

"You speak in enigmas, Lady Sphinx. And I never was good at guessing riddles . . ."

Some day you'll have the answer to that riddle, Ardeth. When you do—Dig—not at all. You're a child. I'm wrong. I'll help you rejoice. If I'm right, I'll try to comfort you. Not for another week. We understand each other. And—I do not gossip, Ardeth Carroll!"

The warm, hearty voice held a backhand note as though Mary Eastwood were in a panic for saying so much.

The memory of it was a bitter spur ret in Ardeth's heart. That night, lying in her small, dark room high above the Avenue, Ardeth moved restlessly in the dark.

Fate Stacked Cards

"I'm afraid those cards are stacked against me, Ken," she confessed.

Ah, she understood — dear Mary Eastwood. Mary Eastwood, the snob, the prig, she too had known this ache of uncertainty. Perhaps she, too, had known it a hundred times before she found the big brown Fred safe in the net of her affections.

A wry little smile touched Ardeth's lips. She could almost hear Mary as she spoke of the new freedom. Called Fred by a pet name scandalously understood, it had always been the name between them. Each intent only on getting the most from life.

Ken laughed when he heard of the week-end party. "Why old Tom! there was laughing jealousy in his voice. "I'll be up to see you then. Even if he has to put up with me! Hey, kid, you're not my own mama, you know. No servants. Fred and I will be chaperones. Phyllis Hawkins, Art Meade-Duvals are the other guests. Clarence and Bill Lade are coming and Tom—that's all."

Then in her own direct way, Mary looks off to the girl before her curiously.

The Make-Believe Wife

A Tale of Marriage, Suspicion, Jealousy and an Unexpected Ending

by Kathleen Norris

"It wasn't the distance. But what I was thinking—what I was fearing! What an awful sensation. Get home to night, and rain, and you somewhere —somewhere else world. The feeling that some middle might be there when you needed me—the feeling that even while I was asking at one place for you might be within a few feet of me, walking away!"

"I know," she said in a whisper. "I know."

"We got into the city at about eight and I telephoned the Chatham—no news. I couldn't think of any other hotel you'd be likely to go to, so got in touch with an agency—A detective —and put him on the search. His very first question," Hugh said, marvelling, "was whether you had ever been with Bert before and where you had stayed."

"So you would have traced me, anyway!" she exclaimed, glad that it was so.

"Oh, yes!" But his face was serious still. "There are a good many things that might have happened to you first Bee," he said.

"I know," she said again meekly.

She had finished her breakfast, and now she went to one of the deep chairs and wheeled another near to it, with a touch of her foot. Hugh obeyed to him.

"Come here and sit down, Hugh; I have to talk to you."

"And I to you," he said, joining her. Ardeth Carroll!" said Hugh, holding her hands in his own—"first you must promise me anything Eastwood may have in a panic for saying so much.

"Nothing of the sort! I'm not a silly girl, Hugh!" she protested, speaking pallidly at first, and then with growing heat.

"Well, it's what I want to think, dear," Hugh laughed briefly, without amusement. "It's what I want to hear. God knows!" he said fervently. "But Bert Eastwood is a friend of mine, I think Bert at the Arms! Last week—when? Ever in town?"

"Yesterday!" Beatrice supplied. They stared at each other a moment.

"Yesterday!" Hugh repeated.

"That's all!" She answered the ones left. "Then I went to Bert's office, telephoned him at your mother's to be sure I didn't miss him. When she said horrible, party," Beatrice admitted with a little shiver.

"But it was because—"

She stopped short, and looked up at him with a pitiful expression on her face, as if she did not quite know how much to tell. Then she suddenly left her chair, and went to the fireplace, where she stood, her back to him.

When she was seated there she took up the argument few was close to his own.

"Hugh, here's something you don't seem to understand," she said. "I'm not blaming you—I'm sure your wife I adore you."

She paused a little shamefacedly and his kind eyes filled with tears.

"Bee, you mustn't—don't say that! You make me almost break me all up!"

"I never thought of any other man's admitting that I couldn't have made any difference if I had!" Beatrice continued, ignoring him. "I was sorry my being a child! Well, I was young. I was inexperienced. I never had been deeply in love, or thought of myself as particular—what shall I say!" She floundered, half laughing and half vexed. "I hate the word sex; I hate the word passion—but you know what I mean?" she finished.

"I do know what you mean!" Hugh agreed. "It is one of the things that make you the wonderful person you are!" he said humbly.

"This unfortunate affair went on, narrowing her eyes, staring into space, suddenly! I knew, in a relief that I was a woman, and that there were things in the world that I had not had sort of—well, taken for granted, that I had to lose or to hold. I just like hooked on him innocently, I'm Bert at the Arms! Last week—when? Ever in town?"

DR. G. BERKELEY ON PLANT STUDY

Foremost Canadian Authority Addresses Rotary Club

Planology, a science with which few are familiar, was brought vividly to the attention of Belleville Rotarians at the weekly meeting Monday in the Hotel Quinte, in word and picture, by one who has made it a life study and is one of the foremost authorities on the subject in the world today, Dr. G. H. Berkeley, Plant Pathologist of the Dominion Laboratories at St. Catharines. Dr. Berkeley is a Belleville boy by remember, Mrs. Ida Berkeley, residing here with his sister, Mrs. Ernest Ashley, 1st Ann street). After passing through Public and High Schools in Belleville, Dr. Berkeley took a course at Queen's University, and afterwards attended Toronto University where he specialized in planology. Here he obtained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Following his chosen life work he opened an office in St. Catharines in the centre of the fruit belt, and has been all his subsequent to planology. The office was small and he began with one assistant and a stenographer. Fruit growers at first were inclined to treat planology, and the planologist as a "good joke" but as time went on they found the value of Dr. Berkeley's knowledge and assistance. His staff increased to a dozen men which is augmented during the busy season, and new growers are glad to ask his help and recognize the importance of his work.

The Dominion government recognized his work and gradually added to his equipment, which now includes a small experimental farm near St. Catharines, and the finest laboratory, largest and best equipped in the Dominion, of which there may be one or larger there are none better in the world exclusively devoted to planology. His researches have developed important results widely recognized as most valuable by other countries, and through his Canada now leads the world in its knowledge and effectiveness in dealing with the wheat rust problem.

Recognizing his ability the Dominion Government has sent Dr. Berkeley on various parts of the United States on missions of importance connected with planology. He leaves soon for a trip to Russian Europe.

Dr. Berkeley's talk to the Rotarians was very interesting. He told some of the enormous losses each year through plant disease, an expression of regret covering anything which injured plant life of any kind and prevented full production and complete life of vegetation growing in the soil. Bacteria and fungi were the most common enemies of plant life and Dr. Berkeley in word and picture showed how fine objects are and progressed also the means taken to check and cure such diseases as in trees, in grains or fruits. More loss is sustained each year in Canada through plant diseases than it cost to build the new Welland Canal, soon to open. In the United States the loss runs over a billion of dollars a year. If to this enormous loss were added the millions of dollars worth of plant life saved through preventative measures developed through scientific study the loss would truly be enormous one. Bacteria, invisible except through powerful microscopes covers fruit and unless checked by careful spraying will cause enormous loss to the fruit grower.

It is the business of Dr. Berkeley, through the Dominion government and the whole of Canada, to devise ways and means of combating the bacteria and fungi so deadly to plant life and the production which is necessary to the life of a nation.

Dr. Berkeley was introduced as an old Belleville boy and a former member of the boys' choir by Perry Hunt, and Rotary appreciation was expressed by Dave Barrgar.

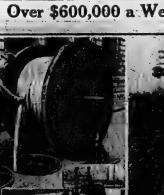
HER BACKACHE TROUBLE QUICKLY DISAPPEARED

Ontario Lady Tells of Benefits Derived From Dodd's Kidney Pills

Mrs. W. H. Garretson New Sleeps Well and Feels Fine

Ridgway, Ont., March 31 (Special) —"I have used Dodd's Kidney Pills for pains in my back and kidney trouble", writes Mrs. W. H. Garretson, who is 71 years old and a respected resident of this place. "They certainly are a wonderful medicine. My backache is entirely gone. I can rest well at nights and always feel fine. I keep a box in the house at all times. They are a fine remedy for kidney trouble."

Dodd's Kidney Pills hold their popularity not because of the promises they make, but because of the good they do.



Dodd's Kidney Pills are purely and simply a kidney remedy. They strengthen the kidneys so they can do their full work of straining the impurities out of the blood.

Pure blood coursing through the body carries to the different parts the nourishment they need to keep them sound and healthy.

FRANK GENISE IS BORNE TO GRAVE

TRENTON, April 1.—(Special)—The funeral of the late Frank Genise, former contractor of Trenton, was held yesterday morning from the late residence 40 St. Peter-in-Chains Church, where Requiem Mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Whalen. Interment was made in the Roman Catholic Cemetery. Mr. Genise had been a resident of Trenton for the past 14 years, having come here when the C.P.R. Railway was built. He is survived by his widow and two sons, John and Samuel, both of Toronto. A large number of his friends in this town showed their esteem for him by attending the funeral, and the floral tributes were many and beautiful. Deceased had been in ill health for some time.

Over $600,000 a Week

THE people of Ontario and Quebec are amongst the most persistent talkers (by telephone) of all the earth's inhabitants. The outlook for coming months shows no let-up in the programme for providing the facilities which the two provinces demand. They must have always at hand adequate means for reaching anyone, practically anywhere, with whom they may wish to talk and to meet their needs the Bell Telephone Company will spend in 1930 over $1 million dollars—upwards of $600,000 every week. Even long distance wires under certain conditions are being buried in cables underground.

YOUNG WIFE STRENGTHENED

Bancroft, Ontario—"When I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had been married about a year and my strength was leaving me on account of my condition. I was only 19 and it was my first child. My neighbor told me I needed something to steady my nerves and a girl friend told me to take the Vegetable Compound. I am so thankful I did because it strengthened my whole system and now I feel perfectly well and have a sweet little baby boy."—Mrs. J. B. Stratton, Bancroft, Ontario.

Worms are encouraged by morbid conditions of the stomach and bowels, and so subtle. Millions of worms destroyed after these conditions almost immediately will vanish from the system far away. No destructive parasite can live in contact with this medicine. Which is not only a worm destroyer, but a healthy tonic, which builds new strength to the young constitution, and as such it has no equal.

KEEPING THE PEACE

She was touring the Western Continent, and had reached Alaska, where she attended worship on her farm.

After admiring a beautiful specimen silver fox, she turned to a native guide.

"How many times could you shoot your fox in self defence?" she asked.

The guide looked at her, then sighed, for she asked similar questions all day long.

"Usually about three times, madam," he replied gravely and politely. "Any more than that would arouse his temper."

Needless Suffering

The next time a headache makes you stay at home—

Or some other ache or pain prevents your keeping an engagement—

Remember Aspirin! For there is scarcely any sort of pain it cannot relieve, and relieve promptly.

Those tablets give real relief, of millions would not continue to take them. They are quite harmless, or the medical profession would not constantly prescribe them.

Don't be a martyr to unnecessary pain. To colds that might so easily be checked; neuritis, neuralgia; to those pains peculiar to women; or any suffering for which Aspirin is such an effective antidote.

FIRE DROVE OUT FAMILY, HOUSE WAS DESTROYED

Adjacent Buildings to House of Albert Craig Were Threatened

VOLUNTEERS WORK

Furniture Carried to Safety By Neighbors Who Rushed to the Scene

Only prompt and efficient effort by a volunteer fire brigade of seventy-five men prevented a serious fire loss in the community of Rednersville, early this morning. The blaze razed a frame dwelling owned by Sturgeon Dempsey and occupied by Albert Craig and his family and it threatened to spread to the adjoining buildings. Hasty telephone calls broadcasting the danger, resulted in a splendid response and bucket brigades was formed and they succeeded in saving other property.

At seven o'clock this morning while Mr. Craig and his family were seated at the breakfast table they noticed smoke pouring from the kitchen. The alarm was sounded and neighbors hurried to the MacAlpine party, and it was only after hiking for many hundreds of miles that they were able to reach civilization.

"ON THE TICK" OFFICIAL SPECIAL PASSES THRU HERE ON TRIAL RUN

Engineer Slackened Speed To Keep Up to Time Limit

"On the tick," using a phrase well-known in railway circles, official special arrived in Belleville at 1:38 p.m. today and one minute after stopping for servants was on its way to Toronto. This train is being sent over the road from Montreal to Toronto in order to cut down running time and give a better service to the business men where minutes count. The time set for the journey is six hours and upon arrival here, officials aboard the train including Sir Henry Thornton, president of the C. N. R. stated that the engineer had to slacken speed in some cases to keep within the limit set. This special is given but two hours from Belleville to Toronto by the present track. International Limited takes two hours and 44 minutes to make the run. The time is gained from Scarboro into Toronto. Leaving Brockville at 11:43 a.m. it arrived here at 1:38 p.m. which was the exact schedule mapped out.

The train was composed of ten coaches some being passenger coaches others official cars, diners and parlor cars.

The composition of the train was made this way in order to test speed and grueling conditions at the same time. An engine of the 6000 class was used to draw the train and consequently engine number 6000 the first to be built was used. Col. Benidict an official engineer was selected to pull the train from Brockville to Belleville and Harry Smith from this city took the train out of this terminal mountaining the rail at the east choice. Only two stops were made before Belleville was being at Coburg junction and the other at the terminal Brockville. George Camelon the conductor in charge of the train and had as trainmen G. Carter and T. Fletcher.

Superintendent George H. Stokes was in Montreal to board the train and is riding through to Toronto. Other officials who are on the special are G. E. Brooks, chief of the Motive Power, Montreal, General Superintendent T. C. Hudson, Toronto, E. J. Rungeford, vice president in charge of transportation, S. L. Bennett in charge of traffic and C. E. Johnson, passenger agent in Toronto. Sir Henry Thornton had a number of guests in the private car. No announcement was made as to the time being a future but it is believed it will be put in the regular passenger schedule.

Peterborough, Ont., April 3.—Within less than three weeks, death has claimed the two oldest men in Ontario, and two of the oldest in Canada. James Hendley, Peterborough County, 108 years old, died here today. He was brought to the hospital here a few days ago from the House of Refuge at Lakefield. Two weeks ago James Wilson, 109, died at his home in Welland. James Hendley was born in the little French-Canad'an village of St. Stanislas des Monts in 1822. Later he was taken to Griffin Cove, Gaspe Peninsula, where he dwelt by the sea for many years. In 1870, he moved with his wife and family to Burleigh Township, Peterborough County. COTTONTAILS FRONT ST. AND GAY NIGHTS

Jim Curran, of the Sault Ste. Mark Daily Star, can talk about his wives and wolverines—ventioning into the outskirts of the town and robbing the garbage cans and killing dogs, but he has yet to see two rabbits playing on the front door step in broad day-light of the city. Clamorous as the wolves are, this comes from the north country, Belleville has one cottontail.

About eight o'clock last night between Bridge and Dundas streets, on Front street, pedestrians and motorists were amazed to see two rabbits bounding up the sidewalk. They apparently amused themselves. Dodging the cars and travelling just about as fast as they were able, they disappeared into the gateway leading to Yateman's garage. This was the last that was seen of them. The bunnieswere cottontails, the hare Jackrabbit.

LAW'S ARM MAY CROSS BORDER

Prosecution of Offending Tourists Possible Under New Laws

Hamilton, April 3.—International legislation between Canada and the United States to enable one country to reach into the other to prosecute motorists wanted for breaking laws on foreign highways was announced here by Hon. George S. Henry, Provincial Minister of Highways.

Speaking before members of the Hamilton Auto Club at the annual meeting, Mr. Henry said that several provinces and many states were now framing reciprocal laws to allow prosecution of citizens wanted in a foreign nation.

The provincial legislature two weeks ago passed a law requiring that an Ontario motorist's license be automatically suspended when he is involved in an accident, whether the accused is in this province, in any other, or in the United States, until he posts a bond with the registrar of motor vehicles here to cover damage liability.

This is as far as he can go legally to become law only next winter—does not provide for international adjustment of damages. It will eventually be extended in scope to cover such liability, it is believed.

PROJECT PLANS TO HONOR TEAM

Belleville Will Pay Tribute to Collegiate Hockey Players

Honour is due to the Belleville Collegiate and Vocational School Boys' hockey team for their splendid showing in the recent fight for the Ontario championship and honour they will receive.

Plans are being made this week for a splendid reception by the boys which will be held in the Collegiate Auditorium within the next few days. Mr. P. C. MacLaurin, principal of the Collegiate, stated that the meeting that the exact date could not be set until word was received from the hockey sports writer of the province, who has been asked to write up the "story" of Sports, at the proposed reception. The Board of Education are unanimously behind the affair and are doing no effort to make the event an outstanding one. A general invitation is extended to all the citizens of Belleville to attend and the City Council will be the guests of the Board.

There will be a number of presentations of a pocket watch to each member of the hockey team by the Board of Education, a musical program, and a short address on "The Value of Sports" by a well known sports writer of Ontario. A fund has been started to help buy the trophies and already two large donations have been received, the first from Mr. P. C. MacLaurin, principal of the Collegiate who generously donated $25.00 and the second by Ascinie Products of Canada Limited who have given $25.00.

EMPIRE BOUND BY SENTIMENT AND CHIVALRY

W. S. Herrington, K.C., of Napanee Is Guide On the World Tour

HOPE FOR THE FUTURE

Love For Law and Order and British Fair Play Is the Connecting Link

W. S. Herrington K.C., of Napanee, was the guide on a brief tour through the British Empire at Bridge Street Church Men's banquet last night. The speaker has made his subject a life-long study and he is well-qualified to talk upon it.

Mr. Herrington touched briefly on Newfoundland, tracing its history from the time it was first discovered by John Cabot. "They found great quantities of fish along the shores and for a time France, Spain and Portugal vied with each other in taking these back to their native countries for trade. Sir Francis Gilbert, then proposed to colonize the island, but Chester overlook him and then when Portugal and Spain were lured to South America by the great reported mineral wealth, the field was left open for Britain and France. Newfoundland claims to be the "Cradle of the British Empire" he said. "The colony to one hundred per cent British, owing to the fact that the Central European cannot stand the climate. In 1855 responsible Government was granted, out provision was made in the British North America Act, that Newfoundland may be included any time that suitable terms may be reached."

The speaker then turned to Canada and made reference to British Columbia first. "This province is separated from the rest of the Dominion by the Rocky Mountains and for this reason it has become more or less isolated and is influenced, and does its trading more with the United States along the Pacific coast, than with other parts of Canada. The aim of British Columbia is to make Vancouver the greatest port in the British Empire." Mr. Herrington observed that there are twenty per cent more divorces in B.C. than the other Provinces while the population is largely Oriental and trade is mostly with Western Asiatic countries.

He spoke saltedly on the prairie provinces and pointed to their main trouble as lying in the European population. He abhorred the tendency on the part of many to raise the racial barrier between the French and the English in Ontario and Quebec, the French were granted free use of their tongue in the Quebec Act and they are rightly entitled to those privileges.

Similar conditions exist in the Maritimes with respect to the rest of the Dominion as in British Columbia, owing to the proximity of the United States," declared Mr. Herrington, "and they are trying to make Halifax and St. John the greatest sea ports in the Empire. Considerable have been received that the Maritimes have not been fairly treated, but they too have been largely influenced by the cities of Providence and Boston directly to the south. Canada, has, however found it possible to live beside another nation without any sort of protection provided at the border," he emphasized.

Turning to the Antipodes he stated that Capt. Cooke and Sir Joseph Banks were the first to explore Australia and they came back with glowing tales. "Great Britain had previously been sending her convicts to the United States, this practice was closed, they were despatched to Botany Bay and it was not until 1867 that it ceased to be a convict settlement. The Government is much similar to ours in Canada but this Commonwealth, the Senators are elected for a period of seven years."

New Zealand was the next port of call on the round world tour. "Twelve hundred miles of rough seas separate Australia and New Zealand, the natives were known as Maori and cannibalism had been cultivated before the first British settlers arrived. As a consequence it was not until 1840 that the first Britishers arrived, the good graces of the natives were cultivated and while there are still fifty-three thousand Maori there now, they are quite civilized and have their own representatives in the Government."

Mr. Herrington noted that New Zealand prides itself on its particularly low death rate which is less than one thousand than any other part of the world.

Swinging to the Cape of Good Hope, Mr. Herrington stated that it was first settled in 1652 when the Netherlands sent out men with the idea of establishing there only a stopping place for disabled vessels. "The British learning of the fertility of the soil, invaded the field, and as a result the French Huguenots who had settled there, escaping persecution, were forced northward where they became the Boers. Gold-in-the-Orange Free State and the Transvaal. In 1837 gold was discovered in the Transvaal which proved its undoing and eventually by treaty after the Great Boer War, Malta were taken over by Britain."

India Demands Independence

"Three hundred million people in an area half as large as Canada, speaking thirty five different languages," was the way he adequately described India. "For a hundred and fifty years it was ruled by a small band of British but problems arose and during the war they developed a national spirit and sought more freedom. They had been denied entrance to other colonies and in 1919 Great Britain passed an Act providing for responsible Government by successive stages. That is what the Gandhi is raising a disturbance about now and he demands that the time has arrived for this measure."

"Ireland is one twelfth as large as Ontario and is governed by two separate bodies," he noted, "and yet more attention has been paid to it than any other part of the Empire."

"What is the great bond that binds us as an Empire?" he queried. "It is not trade, because we trade more with other countries than within the Empire. It is not because we are a common race, descendants of one stock or because we are politically united. It is our British connection that makes us feel as brethren and our common love for the King, because the United Empire Loyalists had little love for George III. It is the love for law and order, the great confidence in the form of Government, the respect for the marital ties, the home life and respect for parenthood, respect for things that are sacred, chivalry in war and in peace, and British sentiment and deep sense of Justice," he declared in conclusion.

Mr. Chas. M. Held acted as chairman of the meeting in the absence of President W. R. Deacon while William Colclough rendered a vocal number. Last night's meeting closed the series of dinners which have been held throughout the winter months. Dr. Bell pastor spoke briefly.

NO EMPLOYMENT FOR WOMEN FOR RESEARCH

Johannesburg, April 3 (CP).—Dissatisfaction exists among women students of the Witwatersrand University owing to the rule passed by the curator of agriculture 18 months ago that no women can be employed in research work in the Division of Plant Industry of the Department of Agriculture.

Professor C. E. Moss of the Botanical Department of the university, said he felt strongly on the subject. "It is a great drawback to any woman scientist or would-be scientist," he said, "for although women are taken on in routine jobs in the Department of agriculture they cannot do research work. It means that it is no use for a woman to go in for higher education because posts are banned to her, and personally I find that mentally women are practically as good as men. It means, too, that women are driven into the teaching profession because there are no other openings." On the subject of women in politics, Professor Moss said, this was the only Dominion where they are paid $500 less for the same work.

By way of explanation, Cook announced they had turned down a cool million for their holdings in South Oklahoma City oilfield. Then oil was discovered. Now, the ten acres are worth nine thousand dollars day in royalties.

Whoopee! Whoopee! Whoopee!

We hear it everywhere. It is the ky-word of the modern Backhasie, the watchword of the younger generation and the catch-word of the show business.

But don't you get fed up on it sometimes?

"WHOOPEE!"

It is here to stay for a long time. It is part of the spirit of our times—but there are moments when we welcome a temporary change, a quieter mood, for the fascination of calmer, simpler ideals.

Perhaps you feel this way right this moment—perhaps you feel as though two hours of amusement without benefit of raucous jazz, saxaphonic no-do-do, and blue whoop-do-doo would be just the thing, just the right tonic for your jangling nerves, just the proper recess from "Whoopee!"

That's why I am writing this message to you. I feel that you are ready for a little vacation in the land of simple life and unpretentious people, away from the glitter and tinsel, blare and fanfare of "Whoopee!"

I am offering you "THE RAINBOW MAN", at the Bellevue beginning Saturday, it is Eddie Dowling's first talking and singing picture. It is probably the first real jazzless singing-talking picture ever produced. It is the plain story of a small-time musical actor who has his heart-breaks with his smiles, but who find the rainbow of real happiness at last in the love of a sweet little country girl. It is human, tender and vital—a picture that you'll love for its simplicity and lyric beauty — a picture that gives you a rest from "Whoopee."

Yours sincerely,

CHARGE BY WIFE WAS WITHDRAWN

Domestic Relations Court Today Bound Over Parties In Case

A charge preferred by Mrs. Lottie Howard of assault against her husband, William J. Howard, of Point Anne was withdrawn before the completion of the case and each party was bound over to keep the peace. The case was heard in the Domestic Relations Court at Belleville by a large number from Point Anne district, who were interested. Magistrate Mikel and the Crown Attorney were of the opinion that the trouble was not between the husband and wife but between the families of the contracting parties. There was no evidence that the husband inflicted the injuries on his wife which were spoken of in court.

Mr. H. D. Ponton, K.C., who defended the husband, stated to the court that when asked by the complainant, Mrs. Howard that her husband had instructed his solicitor to refuse permission for her parents to enter on his premises. When the court gave its finding as to binding over both parties Mrs. Howard asked that the charge be withdrawn. The charge arose over the chastising of one of the children. It was said, in the Howard Home on March 29th, last. It was alleged by Mrs. Howard that her husband threw a chair and in attempting to ward off the blow her hands were slightly injured. She admitted to Mr. Ponton that she had picked up the chair first to throw but the husband grabbed it out of her hand.

Howards also be bound over. The charge arose over the chastising of one of the children. It was said, in the Howard Home on March 29th, last. It was alleged by Mrs. Howard that her husband threw a chair and in attempting to ward off the blow her hands were slightly injured. She admitted to Mr. Ponton that she had picked up the chair first to throw but the husband grabbed it out of her hand.

Basil Rathbone, Leila Hymans, Roland Young and Charlie Chase provide the story of Leila Hyams, Roland Young and George F. Marion. The manner in which theftirst murder was committed was novel, ii bow and arrow being the weapon used and from then on while the detectives wereseeching for clues other murders were committed and always th accompanying Bishop from a chess set would make it's appearance along with a nursery rhyme. The Bishop Murder Case, was taken from the tory of the same name by S. S. Van Dine.

The police wish to notify all car owners to take the keys from their cars if it is only left for a space of five minutes. Cars that are taken are the ones that are easily started. The thieves have no time to re-wire the machines to start them.

Mr. George T. Woodley, one of Belleville's leading furriers, was signally honored during the furriers convention held in the King Edward Hotel, Toronto, on Monday and Tuesday of this week, when he was named the office of third vice-president. This is a great honor as the newly formed organization is a nation-wide affair. KNEW MAJOR IN WEST HOSPITAL

Belleville Boy Treated By U. S. Army Surgeon In Kansas

The name of Chas. W. Shepard, Surgeon-Major in the United States army has cropped up again and will be remembered that Shepard is charged with the murder of his wife last year and is at present awaiting trial in Kansas.

Mr. Luke Van Allen, well-known local boy, living with his mother on North Front Street, knew Major Shepard in 1927. After taking a commercial course at Ontario Business College here, Mr. Van Allen went to the United States and there enlisted in the troop of 1st 2nd. United States Cavalry division. He was transferred to Fort Riley, Kansas, and spent over a year there.

While in camp Mr. Van Allen was stricken with a slight attack of rheumatism and it was then that he came in contact with Major Shepard. He was laid up for two weeks in the military hospital and saw the doctor practically every day.

"I don't think that you could want to meet a nicer man," Mr. Van Allen said to The Ontario Intelligencer today. "He had a nice manner."

Mr. Van Allen stated that the Major must have been crowding sixty years when he knew him. "I never heard him say that he had ever lived in Belleville," he stated, "and so far as I know I never told him that I did. He could have found out some means from easily enough but I guess he never took the trouble. I am sorry to hear that he is in difficulty as I liked him very much."

JUST TWO SELLERS ON MARKET, BOTH SOLD MAPLE SYRUP

One of the smallest Thursday morning markets in some time was seen this morning when but two marketers were present. The one selling maple syrup and eggs, the other selling only maple syrup.

There was a good deal more maple syrup for sale today than his so far been seen this year. One vendor had about forty gallons, which he was selling at sixty cents the quart, or $2.25 the gallon. The other sold for seventy five cents the quart, or three dollars a gallon. Both syrups appeared to be the same in quality.

Eggs retailed at twenty-five cents the dozen for best.

CHARGE BY WIFE WAS WITHDRAWN

Domestic Relations Court To-day Bound Over Parties In Case

A charge preferred by Mrs. Lottie Howard of assault against her husband, William J. Howard, of Point Anne was withdrawn before the completion of the case and each party was bound over to keep the peace. The case was heard in the Domestic Relations Court and attended by a large number from Point Anne district, who were interested. Magistrate Mikel and the Crown Attorney were of the opinion that the trouble was not between the husband and wife but between the families of the contracting parties. There was no evidence that the husband inflicted the injuries on his wife which were spoken of in court.

Mr. R. D. Ponton, K.C., who defended the husband, stated to the court and was admitted by the complainant, Mrs. Howard that her husband had instructed his solicitor to refuse permission for parents to enter on his premises. When the court gave the finding as to binding over both parties Mrs. Howard asked that the Howards also be bound over. The charge arose over the chastising of one of the children. It was said, in the Howard Home on March 28th last. It was alleged by Mrs. Howard that her husband threw a chair during the altercation and struck her hand with the result that she was slightly injured. She was admitted to Mr. Ponton that she had picked up the chair first to throw but the husband grabbed it out of her hand.

"THE BISHOP MURDER CASE" Philo Vance, gentleman, scholar and detective once more solves a baffling and sinister series of crimes committed in London and brings thereby murderer to justice. Yes he does put that in the thrilling picture that opened at the Belle yesterday. "The Bishop Murder Case", and you will be just as satisfied as he was throughout the picture. Thrilled, too, there is no doubt about that and slightly nervous and amazed, all the sensations of a thrilling murder story. sBasil Rathbone gives a splendid portrayal of Philo Vance and has an excellent supporting cast of Leila Hyams, Roland Young and George F. Marion. The manner in which theftrst murder was committed was novel, a bow and arrow being the weapon used and from then on while the detectives wereseeking for clues other murders were committed and always til accompanying Bishop from a clue set would make it's appearance along with a nursery rhyme. The Bishop Murder Case, was taken from the tory of the same name by S. S. Van Dine.

Other highlights on the bill is a Charlie Chase comedy "Stepping Out" a dainty offering Irish Fantasies and a talking news reel.

MR. ROBB AND BIRDLAND

Belleville's former naturalist and birdlover was in Toronto the other night making an announcement over the radio via station CKGW. Mr. Wallace Haselock Robb, whose residence in Belleville up to a recent date made him a familiar figure and who is a leader to conserve wild life, has not lessened in his zeal for the feathered and other creations which are in close association with man. He is still pursuing his calling as voice and mouthpiece of bird life and animal creation. His voice was familiar as he spoke to the unseen audience on Saturday on matters pertaining to his particular interest in life.

At Abbey Dawn Mr. Robb has set up a real sanctuary which is attracting wide-spread interest not only in the district but throughout the province.

HOLSTEIN SALES

The twenty annual sales which have been held by the Belleville District Holstein Friesian Breeders' Club represent an immense turn-over of money and have marked the growth of a great industry. They also show how dairying has been playing a great part in the agriculture of this part of the province. Records in Holstein sales and in Ayrshire sales in this district as well as the growth of the trade in cheese are a good indicator of the general condition of the dairy industry.

The annual sale of Holsteins in Belleville has become an institution. It has real leaders in the industry of cattle breeding with men like James Caskey, Fred R. Mallory, B. R. Leavens and others.

ELECTION DAY GUESSES

Much attention is focussing on Ottawa these days for the possible statement as to a general election date. Late news yesterday said that there might possibly be a decision in favor of August 25th of this year for the election but it was added that Premier King appears no more decided whether to hold an election this year or in 1931 than he was three months ago. It is said, however, that members have been warned to begin their preparations and to continue to make preparations. Before a decision as to the date is reached and before it is announced will likely be some time during which all sorts of guesses will be made.

MR. JONES AND FLOWERS

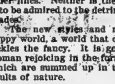
Belleville is represented by a good many citizens abroad, not the least among them being Police Magistrate J. Edmund Jones of Toronto, a son of a former rector, the late Rev. Septimus Jones, still recalled by elderly residents of this city.

Mr. Jones has made his way to prominence not only in the law which is his chosen profession but on the bench. He was also associated with the work of preparing the Anglican hymnal, and is himself a writer of note. Now he has come forward as an exponent of wild flowers.

The Mail and Empire speaks of a small booklet which he has just issued, "Some Familiar Wild Flowers," which he has come to love through his associations with them in summer camps. The Mail says:

"We believe with the author that the selection will attract not only boys and girls, but also adults who have not the time to make a serious study of botany. It will have an additional value because it will be necessary to preserve the smaller plants as the larger ones in order to maintain a balance in nature. Should everyone should therefore help to prevent the destruction of wild flowers by either fire or vandalism. The book is beautifully and faithfully illustrated in large part from photographs taken by Mr. R. S. Cassels, K.C., and representing many years of patient and skilful labor. The annotations are intended to make the study of flowers interesting and from the large bibliography on the subject Mr. Jones has selected ten of those best known and most suitable for the purpose and constantly refers to them. Occasionally his sense of humor asserts itself, as when he remarks of the fleabane: Dried to powder more likely to drive away dogs than fleas, or of garden amaranth leaves: Make a concoction called camomile tea. Altogether 272 different varieties are illustrated and annotated and a complete index at the end of the handy little volume makes it easy for the reader to find them.

It is a fine sign of the times of the stamp of Mr. Jones and Mr. Cassels devoting their spare time to the study of flowers and to the work of increasing the knowledge of flowers among the people.



FASHIONS IN DRESS AND CARS

Spring fashions are about to blossom. Style revues have been held in which the lines of Dame Fashion have been brought home to the people of the city and district. There but awaits the Easterside to bring the new models for 1930. Models in dresses for women and clothes for men are attracting more attention than they ever did.

Can the motor car be credited or blamed with this condition? It is a known fact that there has been more and more attention rivetted on style since the annual model of the car came forth. But then on the other hand the car does not restrict itself to spring for some firms bring out their new types in the middle of the summer when the motor season is at its height.

Whatever the cause, motors, dresses and clothes seem to go in the same class now. The world wants a change of cut and form of color. And why not? There is an absolutely defined line which is correct to the disadvantage of all other lines. Neither is there one color which is to be admired to the detriment of all hues and shades.

The new styles and models make for a happy world, a world that delights the eye and tickles the fancy. It is good to see man and woman rejoicing in the forms and colors all of which are summed up in the vast treasury or vaults of nature.

SIDELIGHTS

THE ANGELS OF MONS

'It may be just that folk have flocked
To glorify a pretty tale;
'It may be true that Something blocked
That desperate battle trail,
And anyhow, the story's growing stale.

But, true or not, there's this is right,
Sure as man lives, and murder's done,
Fate never forged another fight
Since wars were first begun
With so much freedom to be lost or won.

And swearing Tommies beaten back,
But rallying still their broken line
Against the howling Prussian pack,
May not have seemed divine;
But still did heroes' work, and did it fine.

Whether they saw the shining crew,
St. George and all the rest of it,
Or only found a Job to do
And meant to stand their bit,
Something or someone gave them grip and grit.

—From Punch, 1914.

NIFTY, NEAT, BUT NOT GAUDY, prophetic of better things to come, said the Old Settler in referring to the first issue of The Ontario Intelligencer, and all along the line the most favorable comments were made as to Belleville's advance in journalistic effort. Here's one worthy of special notice. Dolan the Druggist devoted his advertising space to congratulations before he saw a copy of the new paper, knowing that the effort would be worthy of the staff and being that kind of a human with lots of faith and plenty of charity. Here's what Dolan the Druggist, (Charlie and Terry), paid good money to say (and we had the nerve to charge them regular space rates, too, wirra, wirra, what do you think of that)?

THE GREAT FAMILY JOURNAL is looking up, folks are going to get their news in one parcel now instead of two, and get more of it when the new organization is all completed. But one thing the general public is not "hep" to is the appalling expense attached to the installation of equipment for a modern daily newspaper, and the painful experience of seeing many good dollars being transformed into the price of junk. Takes a heap of courage to do things like this, investing between fifty and a hundred thousand dollars in betterments based on faith in the good folks of this district willingness to support a necessary public service in the way which such a service should be supported, a newspaper service which will help to build up the prosperity of the Bay of Quinte district in every way.

CHOICE STOCK IS DISPOSED OF AT ANNUAL SALE

Professor W. J. Bell of Kemptville Pays Top Price For Cow

PRICES WERE FAIR

Buyers From Quinte District Pleased With Cattle Offered

The 20th annual sale of Holstein Friesian cattle by the Belleville District Breeders' Club was held yesterday at the rear of the Belvidere Hotel and was largely attended by buyers from local and distant points. The sale was a success and good prices were realized, by Norman Montgomery of Tercolo, who auctioneered the cattle, although the sale did not total as much as in the good years shortly after the war. The economic conditions are not as good and the breeders who were in the market were willing to pay high prices for the stock that would suit their needs. The sale total $7,670.00, which included fifty-two head and five calves. There were thirteen males offered and the top price at this was above the average obtained in other years this fact being accounted for by the males all being of splendid type and ready for service. The highest price will paid by Professor W. J. Bell of Kemptville Agricultural School for "Daisy Pauline Pietertje Bell", the amount being $410.00. This animal will be taken to Kemptville and included in the herd that is now at the experimental farm.

Professor Bell was pleased with his purchase, the cow being consigned by Archibald Parks, of Napanee, an extensive breeder. The second highest price was paid by A. E. Holmes of Winchester, for "Silver Stream Ormsby", the amount being $285.00. Mr. Holmes was in large purchaser at the sale and expects the animals bought to be the nucleus of a fine herd of Holstein Friesian.

All the males that were exhibited at the show in the morning were sold in the ring and brought fine prices. Mr. E. O. Butler, Brighton, who was award ed first prize for his yearling bull "Champions Sylvius Lyons" received $200.00, which was the top from Dave Harvey of Marysville. The fifth placed male also brought the same amount Mr. R. A. Reeves of Bloomfield, owned the animal, his sire being the famous "Pluto bull" and Howard Holden, Stirling, became the owner. Its ancestry sold the bull for as much as the champion and many breeders stated he was as fine a type. The two year olds that will freshen for the first time this year did not sell as well as in other years.

There were eight sold and they brought a total of $910.00 an average of over $113.00 a piece. Thirteen three year olds brought $1660.00 an average of $128.00 which was not as high as last year. RADIO FANS CORNER

The reception did not quite measure up to the previous night's standard but at least we had all we wanted to and that is more than we do some nights.

Granland Rice gave a splendid sport talk last night on Gentleman Jim Corbett during the Coca Cola program last night. The program was good all the way through in fact.

America's humourist Will Rogers has succumbed to the lure of the Mike and starting next Sunday will broadcast a series of talks I imagine on the weather besaules and extra time offered in Honey California. He will be heard over WABC and system. Just at present I can't say what time he'll broadcast, but we'll let you know later.

Thursday night—Amos 'n' Andy No need to remind anyone though every one listens in anyway. A program we mustn't pass up to-night though is the Fleischman hour because Phil Cook is the guest artist and of course there is Rudy Valley, and his boys on the same program.

Over WJZ at midnight to-night we hear B. A. Rolfe directing the Palm d'Or orchestra and believe me it's bound to be good.

B. A. Rolfe's Lucky Strike dance orchestra which we hear every Saturday night has created such a heavy demand from the fans for similar music during the week that the sponsor and NBC officials have decided that we shall have it. It is to be under the name of the Lucky Strike program and is to go on the air on Wednesday night at 9.30. This orchestra is outstanding for its individualistic rhythm and tempo and B. A. Rolfe will lead the same group of thirty-six musicians in the new series. Look for it next week.

Mildred Hunt, so the Radio Digest informs us, has returned to the radio following an absence of six months. Miss Hunt has been heard on the program of the Radio Keith Orpheum hour and was billed as "Radio's Sweetheart". The sweet contralto singing of Miss Hunt is now heard in the program "Broadcasting Broadway", featuring hits from-Broadway musical comedies and light operas, both past and present, and is heard over the National Broadcasting system.

WORK-WORN WOMEN

Care of Home and Children Often Causes a Breakdown

The woman at home, deep in household duties and the cares of motherhood, needs occasional help to keep her in good health. The demands upon a mother's health are many and severe. Her own health trials and her children's ailments exact heavy toll, while hurried meals, broken rest, and much indoor living tend to undermine her. No wonder the woman at home is often embraced through weakness headaches, backaches and nervousness. Too many women accept these visitations as a part of the lot of motherhood. But many and varied as her health troubles are, the cause is along and well defined. When well, it is the woman's good blood that keeps her well; when ill she must make her blood rich to regain her health. The woman who needs more than any other woman needs rich blood and plenty of it. There is one way to get this good blood, and one necessary to health, and that is through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They enrich the blood, and through the blood many weak, ailing wives and mothers have been benefitted. If you are ailing, easily tired or depressed, it is a duty you owe yourself and your family to give Dr. Williams Pink Pills a fair trial.

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50c a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Astronomical telescopes as long as 208 feet were made in the eighteenth century, but they were not very successful.

LEAFS FORTIFY WEAK POSITIONS PITCHING HELP

S. O'Neill, Toronto Leader Drives His Players Hard

Tarpon Springs, Fla., April 3.—Last year the Toronto club finished second in the International League race, and Manager Steve O'Neill did not leave training headquarters at Albany, with as strong a baseball team as the one he will lead out of this same lodge morning.

That partly can be accounted for through the failure of the Detroit club to send help before the Leafs arrived in Baltimore for the opening of the 1929 schedule. It was in the Orioles City that Sam Gibson, Phil Page and Art Ruble fought up with the Toronto team. Later Frank Barnes, Outfielder Jonathan Stone and Infielder Nolan Richardson were obtained.

Of course at time last year Lefty Martin, Jess Doyle and Don Hankins were expected to turn in a reasonable number of victories, but all three fell apart badly.

The infield was being rated as one of the strongest and best balanced in the league and it was on paper, but Fred Bedore failed to play up to expectations.

Nothing was thought to be wrong with the outfield but Cyril Sheedy was unable to get going, while none of the youngsters came through, and were sent out for seasoning.

Few of the players in camp last Spring are with the team now. Steve O'Neill represents the catching end, while Wesley Levrenz and Charley Fisher of the pitchers—are the only ones left. Joe Cole, Bucky Barnes and Bedore Pensair of the infield talent, while Leo Mena, Sheedy and Art McHenry are the outfielders still active in the team, but McHenry was sent to Scranton, while Sheedy finished last year's campaign with Buffalo.

Different This Year

Conditions are somewhat different this Spring, and the Leafs and their Tigers is already in camp and will have been with the team more than a week before it leaves for the north. With the exception of one position the infield has been decided up on, and there are plenty of good outfielders.

Despite the fact that Steve O'Neill expected considerable trouble from Doyle Hankins and Martin, than he received, he is 100 per cent. more satisfied with the pitching corps now than he was at the same time a year ago.

In other words the Leafs pilot with the opening of the league season, 14 days away, expects to be a far better season in regard to pitchers, whereas a year ago he had his doubts and as to how things would turn out, and rightly so.

O'Neill appears to have plenty of quality as well as quantity in pitching material, and his only trouble will come when he tries to cut his hurling corps right at home. He has 14 pitchers at present.

Nothing Wrong Here

As to catchers, Eddie Phillips and Hugh Wise are superior to Bud Hungling, who started last season as understudy to O'Neill and finished with other teams.

Harry Davis, up for his third trial with the Leafs in the organization, will fill Bill Sweeney's shoes at first, while Burke, Cole and Richardson, will be dore as utility unit, complete the infield. Cole and Richardson both were the best defensive infield trio on the International League at the close of the 1929 season.

Six expected outfielders are trying for places on the team, when the Spring Manager O'Neill had three, but the war department turned out to be the Leaf's leading batsman.

The busy lads of Shinners, Sweeney and Stone may be missed this year but them again they may not if only Bob Petrie, obtained from Port Worth Sheedy, McHenry and Eddie Phillips can come through with a hitting punch, the outfield will be able to do so remains to be seen.

One thing, Davis will not hit as high as Sweeney, Richardson will have a much better year at the bat unless all signs fail, while if Joe Harris is able to get into condition he will drive in many runs.

Cuts Money

For a double "A" club to cart a lot of young and inexperienced players to camp every Spring appears to be a costly thing. The Toronto Club had Jimmy Kline at Albany last year and Joe Samuels, a pitcher, was the only one from that Belleville received some desirable publicity, but as a sporting centre, but s/o as the home of clean athletes and that is something of which every city may be proud. Something might be done to honor both teams but no move has been made to date. It would be appropriate that the city, along with the local service clubs, honor the members of both teams up some fitting manner. A joint meeting of the Service Clubs will be held May 3rd, and while the date is rather late, it might be an ideal time to do something. Something of this sort, anyway!

The Canadian Legion have arranged a splendid card for the boxing tournament on April 21st at the armouries. Three more entries were received this morning and they are two more needed to complete the affair. It will be the biggest amateur event attempted by the Legion and fans are looking forward to a big evening of entertainment.

Stanley Hagerman, popular local hockey and baseball player, will receive congratulations of his friends on his return from the Soo where he is engaged in business, on the arrival of a boy. It weighed thirteen pounds and is a healthy, rollicking specimen of young Canada.

With the start of the year when the sport scribe seeks frantically his daily grist of gossip. The hockey season will close th's week with the Stanley Cup Series while the ball reason is yet in the offing. The Canadiens defeated Montreal to down the Bruins locally and the Canadiens have historic rung for Canada. Howie Morenz and his henchmen are playing at the peak of their form now.

Six weeks more and the baseball season will open and nothing has been done locally with regard to a t'llm. It's time an organization meeting was held to lay plans for the summer campaign. There is no doubt of prospective success again this season and an early start is always conducive to a strong finish. It appears as though the baseball situation in Peterboro will be handled by the Canadian General Electric and the veteran Johnson, Redman, Shanahan, Pringle, all will likely hang up their spangles for good. At that if they carry out their threat we'll miss the none too gentle bait of the homely Hibernian and the lowing squawk of his partner "Shiner." The days of Solomon, Johnson and the rest of the Peterboro gang are gone forever and happy days they were.

The softball moguls have got under way and the armouries league will start shortly. It will at least provide amusement until the outdoor season begins.

The new intermediate loop embracing the towns in the Bay of Quinte district should provide the fans with something good. The League is off to a good start and at least it is fortified with a strong Executive Board which if it functions properly, should be the means of developing good teams and lively competition. The Canadian Pacific Athletic Club at Trenton is behind the movement while several local industrial concerns will enter teams.

In the hands of the secretary, be turned over to the baseball delegates, was carried, and these with the C.G.E. attempt to devise some means of financing the project without the aid of the Association. This plan should not be difficult as easily ninety per cent of the employees in the plant are members of the league in one capacity and some new developments should be forthcoming in the near future.

LAKESHORE BALL LOOP ORGANIZES

Port Hope, April 2.—Spurred on by its success in 1929, the Lake Shore intermediate league at the annual meeting here tonight decided to operate again this season. Officers in all possibility Cobourg, Peterboro, Colborne and Port Hope will comprise the 1930 loop. Considerable business was transacted and other plans will be completed at a subsequent meeting. Wm. Ray, Peterboro, well known Eastern Ontario sportsman, was appointed a delegate to attend the O.A.A.A. annual session at St. Catharines on Saturday. The following officers were elected: Hon. pres., Mayor Chamberlain, Cobourg; First Vice President, N. McDougall, Oshawa; Second Vice President, Wm. Kay, Peterboro; Secretary-Treasurer, M. B. GOSLIN SIGNED WITH SENATORS

Chattanooga, Tenn., April 3—After two months of long distance debate over terms, Goose Goslin, outfielder, today signed his 1930 contract with Clark Griffith, president of the Washington National.

After a brief conference with Griffith, Goslin said he had "signed a contract at Mr. Griffith's terms."

The terms offered Goslin were a $18,000 straight salary and a bonus scale which would make it possible for him to draw all of the $18,000 while he received last year.

DROP HERB README

Boston, April 3.—Herb Readme, veteran goaltender for the Boston Tigers today was dropped from the club by Manager Eddie Powers. The latter said that the goaler had not been playing his best and had failed to clear training rules.

On the Sport Trail

Belleville had two near-championship teams th's year in separate fields of sport. The College ice hockey-Ehm reached the fina's in the Ontario playdowns, while the Y's Men's basketball team was eliminated in the finals for the Ontario cage honors. The fact that both of these teams reached the finals, indicates conclusively that Belleville received some desirable publicity, not only as a sporting centre, but s/o as the home of clean athletes and that is something of which every city may be proud. Something might be done to honor both teams but no move has been made to date. It would be appropriate that the city, along with the local service clubs, honor the members of both teams up some fitting manner. A joint meeting of the Service Clubs will be held May 3rd, and while the date is rather late, it might be an ideal time to do something. Something of this sort, anyway!

FINAL GAME FOR STANLEY TROPHY

Canadiens Have One Victory—Bruins Face Big Task

Montreal, April 3—The Stanley Cup will hang in the balance tonight as the Forum when Canadiens and Boston Bruins, survivors of the National Hockey League play-offs, clash in the second game for world professional honors. The Flying Frenchmen gained a stranglehold on the trophy by taking the first game of the series at Boston Tuesday by a 3 to 0 score, and need a win tonight to clinch the historic trophy back to Canada from its Boston resting place. Should the Bruins even up the series by a win tonight the home and fans will decide the final game at the Hub Saturday night.

Jubilant over their remarkable victory Tuesday night, Canadiens returned to their home town to receive an enthusiastic welcome from a crowd that gathered to greet them at Bonaventure Station. The Frenchmen arrived rather late after the long train journey from Boston, but otherwise in good condition. Bruins also arrived, accompanied by a delegation of Boston fans and led by their manager, Art Ross.

Frenchmen at Ease

A packed rink will welcome the Canadiens back to their home ice, anxious to watch the two teams battle it out again. The unlopsided win of the Frenchmen over the championship has heightened interest in the game considerably. Depending a lot on form the local sextette should be slightly favored to take the world title. They proved the superiors of the Hub Bruins in a wide margin Tuesday, and unless there is a reversal of form on the part of both teams, the Frenchmen should come through.

Bruins, with their backs to the wall will certainly put everything they have into the game, and the Frenchmen will face a squad that is better conditioned and infinitely more balanced than the sextette they defeated in Boston.

The Canadiens will go into the game splendid condition that saw them come through the three-game play-offs with amazing stamina, Canadiens came in the fifth game wonderful to end the hockey season on Forum ice.

Absence Is Felt

The spearhead of the Canadiens' attack, Howie Morenz, came through the Boston game with flying colors, but appears ready to lead the Frenchmen against the Bruins tonight. Bruins are suffering minor injuries, but none of importance that will interfere with the game.

Goalkeeper Art Ross will likely start his "thunderbolt" trio in the second game. The Barry-Oliver-Galbraith line was the mainstay of the Bruins forward combinations on Tuesday, and it will probably be given the same assignment. Gainor will be back in the line-up, while Joe Lamb will be in Malcolm Castor-Larochelle line consistently on the Canadien forward. Keen in good shape, they will probably start.

The officials will be Bobby Hewitson and Cooper Smeaton, the team who handled the game at Boston.

Bonar Law

Bonarlaw, April 2 (By Mail)—Mr. and Mrs. John Roblin of Belleville, visited Mr. and Mrs. George Eastwood on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. John Meisle,John and Emma visited Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Green on Monday.

C. G. E. SPONSOR PETERBORO BALL

Canadian General Electric Co. May Back a Central League Team.

Peterboro, April 3—The plan proposing the taking over of the Central Ontario senior franchise by the C.G.E. Social and Athletic Club which was clearly set forth by a committee of three men, representing the baseball enthusiasts in the plant, in an interview with the officers of the above organization at the regular meeting of club held Monday night was turned down due to the fact that the adoption of the plan would be contrary to the constitution of the organization.

The constitution reads that every person participating in sports sponsored and financed by this Association must be members of the Club and this clause alone was responsible for the refusal of the officers to give their permission to undertake the project. It appears that there is not sufficient playing material available in the local plant to warrant the formation of a team for entry in the Central Ontario League, and the introduction of outside players would conflict with the constitution.

A motion that all correspondence, ed with its strength, is used universally dealing with the subject which was ally in aeroplane manufacture.

In the Ladies' Junior Afternoon League game the Hustlers took all four points from the Arenas. In an interesting game, the Ajaxs split and have a good chance to with out, but those Hustlers and the Beaks and Try as well as the Protons, will be hard to stop from now on. High bowlers were Mrs. Laughlin for Hustlers, and Mrs. Donnan for Arenas. Nine pins were the game. Laughlin 196-161, Mrs. Goodfellow 160, Mrs. Gorsline 222, Mrs. Donnan 185, Mrs. Kenwell 182.

The Teachers' League games Monday night of the Gypsy year-ending were between the teachers from S. S. In the Roller vs. Pins Aces Senior League game the Aces took four points from the league leading Rollers and tightened up the league race. During the argument the following toppled them for real fine singles: Yerex 308, 191, 257, Kennedy 201, 246, Dixon 256, 224, Legault 272, Adams 2333, 227, 204 Meagher 242, 205, 246.

In the second Senior league game the Cherry Pickers annexed four points at the expense of the Gypsy Kings. The high men were, Lancaster 3.3, Torrance 193, Hitchen 189, Lesson 173, 240. From the Cherry Pickers Mrs. Cassidy had 181 Freeman 186 with a disappointment. This young man rolls a pretty practice game, but his team down badly last night. His 118 being low for the night.

FRUIT GROWING IN CANADA

All kinds of fruit are successfully grown in all except the colder parts of the Dominion of Canada, but fruit growing as a commercial industry is largely confined to certain definite districts, these being principally the Annapolis valley in Nova Scotia, the southern half of Ontario, and the valleys of British Columbia. The very fine Bay of St. John River in New Brunswick produces apples on a commercial scale, and there are parts of Quebec, notably in the counties of Rouville, Huntingdon, Chateauguay, Jacques Cartier, and Stanstead where apple-growing is successfully practiced on a commercial scale.

FRY AT GLENORA HAS THREE HEADS

The Provincial fish hatchery at Glenora, Prince Edward County, is a busy place these days. Millions of fish eggs are beginning to hatch. Among the fry this week one with three heads was found. This is very unusual. In the past three years several fish have been found in this hatchery with two heads, but no three-headed ones.

The oddity is lively, and promises to develop into a full-sized speckled trout. Also unique are a number of white speckled trout that may be seen at the hatchery.

The explosive "firedamp" or "marsh gas," dreaded by miners is a valuable constituent of natural and artificial cooking gas.

TRENTON AND DISTRICT

INDUSTRIES IN TRENTON SUPPLY MANY WORKMEN

Timber Products Company and Other Plants Very Active

HINDE AND DAUCH

Industrial and Mining Pictures Finished at Studio

Trenton, April 3. (Special)—Trenton's year-round industries are at present giving employment to a large number of men, as a short analysis of the principal industries will show. Although there are a great number of unemployed in the town, these are for the most part men who have drifted here from other centres in the hope of getting work at the new air camp, but practically every one of these is doomed to disappointment.

Timber Products Limited, who operate a sawmill on Locke Island in the Trent River, started work on the 17th of March, 1930. They give employment to a large number of local men. A fatal unfortunate accident occurred there since commencing operations, but was due to the careless action of the workmen in disregarding danger signs and cannot be blamed on the company. At present the logs are shipped in from North Hastings but within a year this enterprising company intends to start manufacturing various articles made from wood at their factory in Trenton.

The Spring Valley Canning Factory is being gone over in preparation for an active season this year, and although only a small number of men are employed there at present, when the season opens many Trentonians will find employment there.

The Hinde and Dauche Paper Mills are running at full strength, as are the Trenton Chrysole Company, the Borden Milk and Milk factory, Proctor and Gamble's, and the Trenton Cotton Company which is being operated in the building formerly owned by the Dominion Textile Mills.

Industrial and mining moving pictures are being finished at the Canadian Government Motion Picture studio at the base of the mountain here, and although this does not employ a large staff, it is steady employment for several.

TRENTON WOMEN LIBERALS MEET

Mrs. W. A. Fraser Elected President Succeeding Mrs. McConville

Trenton, April 3. (Special)—Trenton Women's Liberal Club held its 1930 organizaat meeting out on Tuesday night in the Liberal Club rooms here, a fair sized crowd being in attendance. The chief business transacted was the election of officers for the ensuing year they being as follows:

Honorary President — Mrs. W. A. Fraser, Mrs. Anson Whitter.

President—Mrs. C. McConville.

1st Vice-President—Mrs. J. Sherry.

2nd Vice-President—Mrs. H. Cory.

3rd Vice-President—Mrs. J. J. McNabb.

Secretary—Miss N. McPhail.

Treasurer—Mrs. D. Fraser.

Mrs. McConville acted as chairman for the evening, she having been president of the club in 1929, while Mrs. J. Vanblaricomb of Picton was the principal speaker. She chose as her subject, "Woman's Place in Politics," and her talk, which was both interesting and instructive, was well received.

SCHOOL ESTIMATES STRUCK AT TRENTON

TRENTON, April 3.—(Special)—Trenton School Board held a regular monthly meeting last night, but aside from the routine business there was little of importance. The estimates for year 1930 were struck by the members but the figures were not available this morning. Mr. Howard Jarrett, Chairman of the Board, presided at the meeting.

INJURED MAN TO RECOVER HEALTH

Cecil Pickle May Lose Finger and be Out of Ball Series

TRENTON, April 3.—(Special)—The condition of Mr. Cecil Pickle, who was seriously injured at the Timber Products Ltd. sawmill here last Monday, is much better, it was learned today. Although the injured man will lose a finger, it is thought that in time he will fully recover. This accident strikes a heavy blow at Trenton's baseball prospects, as the injured man was being counted on as a pitcher. Owing to the fact that his shoulder was dislocated, it is unlikely that he will be able to get in the game this year at last.

JUNIOR LEADERS MEET IN APRIL

Scout Master H. Jarrett Announces Details Of Trenton Meeting

TRENTON, April 3.— (Special) — Scouts of this district will undoubtedly be interested in the announcement that a Junior Leaders' Conference has been called for April 22nd and 23rd in Trenton to which all Troop Leaders and Patrol Leaders are invited. None under the rank of patrol leader can attend however. It is expected that representatives of Belleville, Frankford, Brighton, Deseronto, Picton, Wellington, Campbellford, Marmora, Colebrook, Bonar Law Cobourg and Trenton will be in attendance, as well as the Lone Scout Patrol at Milford.

According to Scout Master Howard Jarrett of Trenton, the Conference will open with a dinner on the first evening, there will be three meetings the next day and the conference will close with another dinner program the next night. There will be a registration fee of one dollar per delegate which will cover dinners and other expenses while in Trenton, and tickets will be provided in private Trenton homes for the one night in which the scouts will stay here The only other expense will be transportation to and from Trenton.

One of the scouts who attended the World Jamboree in England last year will be present to tell about his event at one of the business sessions and a play "Mac Decimal" which was put on by the scouts at the annual meeting of the Provincial Council in St. Catharines a few weeks ago and which made a big hit, will also be shown for the benefit of the delegates.

VITAL STATISTICS FOR TOWN TRENTON

TRENTON, April 3—(Special)—Vital statistics for the town of Trenton for the month of March as released yesterday by the Town Clerk were as follows— ten births, nine deaths and seven marriages. The birth rate is larger for last March than it had been for the corresponding months for the past four years, while the births and deaths were much the same.

GASOLINE PUMP WAS DAMAGED

Motorist Leaves Belleville But at Trenton Pays Amount Asked

TRENTON, April 3.— (Special) — When Louis Lefkovits, of Montreal, Quebec, failed to settle up for damages to a gasoline pump which he struck in Belleville yesterday afternoon and left the scene without paying, word was flashed to Trenton to apprehend him, with the result that Constable Miller of the Trenton force stopped him at the bridge. When taken to the police station, Lefkovitz explained that the gasoline pump owner wanted too much money for the damage, so he decided that there was nothing to do but forget it. Consequently he had proceeded serenely along his way. He paid the amount asked, three dollars, to the Trenton Police, however and then was allowed to continue his journey westward.

STEPHENS-ADAMSON COMPANY'S LOCAL BRANCH STAFF WORKING AT TOP SPEED ON RUSH ORDERS

One Hundred Men Employed In Manufacturing Milking Equipment

Employing about 100 skilled men in the various departments of its immense works, the Stephens-Adamson Company's local branch today stands forth as one of the most successful industries that has ever come to Belleville. The company has only been located here for three years, yet in that time has provided steady employment for a hundred men and during that period has never closed its doors due to trade depression or for any other reason. It would seem that there is no such thing as trade depression in this firm's operations as at the present time, and all winter, when the usual wolf of unemployment was howling at the door of many industries in Canada and the United States, this industry not only kept going steadily but managed to run twenty-four hours, day and night.

Make Mine Machinery

It is more than surprising how few people know just what Stephens-Adamson Company of Canada, manufactures. Your reporter had but a hazy idea himself when he arrived in the factory office yesterday afternoon.

The Stephens - Adamson Company, with head offices and factory at Aurora, manufacturers conveying machinery for the mining industry. For instance, practically all the machinery in the famous Noranda mine was installed by this firm and they have also supplied the machinery for such well-known mines as Hollinger, Dome, Hudson Bay, Consolidated Mining and Smelting, International Nickel, McIntyre, Porcupine and many others.

In the machine shop section, the machines never rest. The day shift comes on at 7 o'clock and works until 4 o'clock until six. The night shift comes on at 7 o'clock and works until six the next morning.

And still the orders come in. The company at present has trouble filling all the orders with the rapidity that is desired, but it is rumored that within the next year extensive additions to the present factory will be made.

There are five separate units to the factory. First, there is the machine shop, where the finished material is shipped in from the plants. Second is the department operated under Don White, as foreman, and is, perhaps, the busiest section in the plants. Housed in this building is the largest boring-mill in the city, and possibly in the district. One wonders from there into the farm room, which is comparable to the steel shop, is a haven of quiet refuge. H. Norris is in charge of this section.

The steel shop, with G. Goudy in charge, is the noisiest plant of them all. With riveting machines, rat-tat-tatting, drop hammers smashing, electric welders in operation, and various other noise-making machinery running at top speed, it is a relief to pass into the comparative quiet of the pattern shop, in charge of Jas. Shiller. Here, too, is not exactly the quietest of the countryside, but there is the difference between the sound of wood being sawed and planed, and that of steel being riveted and smoothed off.

Twenty Interesting Spot.

Last of all, but decidedly not least, one reaches the foundry. To the layman, unacquainted with the intricacies of cobble-prints, here is the most impressive of all the departments. The first thing to catch the eye is a cupola furnace, in which is thrown pig iron, scrap iron, in fast all kinds of iron, heated until it is in the molten state and then poured into moulds.

At 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon the huge cauldron in which a fire had been glowering all day, was suddenly thrown into life when the compressed air blower was turned on and a terrific heat generated. About eighteen minutes after the blower had been switched on, the molten metal started to pour out of the furnace into a huge ladle. From this ladle, men with a small edition of the bucket carried the melted iron to the moulds where it was poured. After all the moulds were filled, their work for the day was done, and they certainly deserved a rest.

And so all the machinery that a mine can require is manufactured right here in Belleville, by one of the largest companies of its kind in the world. Impossible to get skilled labor in this city, about forty families from Toronto, Montreal, other Canadian cities, the United States, England, Scotland and Wales were imported to work in the plant.

Over four tons of raw iron a day is poured into the gigantic furnace, nearly twenty-eight tons a week. Two men are kept busy all the time the furnace is in operation, just tossing the raw iron into the melting pot. Coke, iron, brought from pure iron, and pig iron, imported, are used for this purpose.

Huge consignments leave the foundry at one time. For instance, last summer, fourteen freight cars of machinery were shipped to Saskatchewan for use by the government of that province. Four cars of mining equipment were recently shipped to the International Nickel mine at Copper Cliff, Ont. A month ago seven cars of machinery were sent to the Hudson Bay Mining Company, also at Flin Flon. The entire plant is kept going at fever heat all the time.

And yet, withall these men, all employed in dangerous work, there has not been one fatality in the factory since the Stephens-Adamson Company took it over. Numerous small, unimportant accidents there have been to be sure, it is expected in a factory of any size, but there has yet to be an accident of serious proportions. The most serious, perhaps, occurred last year when one of the men spilled some molten metal down his legs and severely scalded them, and his feet. He was laid up in the hospital for three months, but is back on the job again, as well as ever and bearing no marks of his harrowing experience.

The whole plant is under the general managership of Mr. O. A. Pretchard, of Aurora, Ill. There are eighteen employed in the office itself and they are kept nearly as busy as the workmen.

Belleville could do well to have more industries of this nature, where there is steady employment the year around. The factory itself is in a difficult place to reach but it would be well worth anyone's time to take an afternoon off some time and visit it.

From the manager, including the chief engineer, A. E. May, and the superintendent, L. O. McIntosh, down, there is the greatest of courtesy shown to visitors.

VOCATIONAL BUREAU HELPS WOMEN PUPILS

Toronto, April 3 (CP).—Plans for a vocational bureau to serve women's interests in Canada under the auspices of the Canadian Federation of University Women's Clubs. It was announced that the next annual meeting of the International Federation will be held at Prague in July, 1930, and arrangements were made to have the Canadian Federation represented.

This year Miss Beatrice Abbott of Toronto and Miss Mary White of Kingston will study in Europe on Canadian Federation scholarships.

The scholarship committee reported that this year the award had gone to Miss Mary E. White, B.A., a brilliant student in classics and a fellow at Queen's University, who intends to continue her work at Oxford. Dr. Geneva Misener, the convenor, outlined the ambitions of her committee to have a junior scholarship, tenable in Canada, established, and also be in a position to place academic positions in Canada some of the graduates who have studied in Europe and achieved enviable careers, but who cannot secure posts at home. Reference was made in the report to the distinguished success attained at Oxford by Miss Dorothea Sharp, Ph.D., who won the scholarship in 1924.

A member of the federation, Miss Margaret Cameron, of the University of Saskatchewan, is compiling a bibliography of the published works of Canadian women.

Belleville was represented by John Thomson, architect, who stopped over on his way to Lindsay where he has important work under way. Port Hope had the largest delegation, and Cobourg, Campbellford and Bowmanville were well represented. Illinois Professor Writes "Thriller" in the Form of History

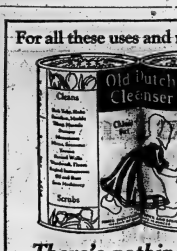
(Canadian Press)

Springfield, Ill., April 2.—A thriller has come out of Belleville, Illinois. Strange to say, the thriller is a history of the French in America, done by an American savant, Dr. J. H. Schlarman, who ransacked libraries in two continents for source material, and who made a sure thing of his book by trying it out on a variety of intellects, before he published it.

"From Quebec to New Orleans" is the title of the book. Its first thrill is its cover, giving a colorful and geographically correct picture of the French dispersion, showing that Belleville is almost in the centre of the one-time French domain in America. Maps in the book are unique, in that they give the reader of today an adequate sense of French occupation, the location of all the French forts in the Mississippi and Ohio river valleys the valley of the St. Lawrence, and about the Great Lakes. This Dr. Schlarman assures the reader, has never been done before.

Martyrdom of French missionaries, death struggles of soldiers and savages, pictorials of great Frenchmen who contributed so much to this country's historic background are pictured in the book, on 50 full pages, of illustration.

Doctor Schlarman has endeavored he says, and manifestly has succeeded in making history like a novel. His 569 pages each hold the maximum of interest, that romantic history of Dr. Schlarman's method could put into them. After the material was put into shape Dr. Schlarman said he had various friends read the manuscript. Twenty-five of them in Texas, New York, Quebec and Belleville read it. He had them point out passages they would like to read more about, or passages difficult for them to understand. After repeated changes, Dr. Schlarman said, he believed he had a book with a maximum of interest for the greatest number of readers.



One reader expressed his opinion of the book after spending almost an entire night reading it. "It's not a novel," he said, "because it is history, and it's not history because history is not written that way." His footnotes indicate the extent to which he has delved into the archives of Europe and America, searching out long hidden facts of history. Where controversy has perpetuated two versions, Dr. Schlarman has spent most time enlisting the aid of eminent French historians and Americans, in France and particularly in the province of Quebec.

Beginning with the coming of Jacques Cartier to the site of Quebec in 1535, the story follows the French up the St. Lawrence, across the Great Lakes and down the Mississippi and Ohio valleys to Fort de Chartres which is one of Illinois' most historic spots, and New Orleans. It depicts the conflicting interests of the British and French colonists, the wars with the savages, bitters of the missionaries, the epics of explorers, the eventful clash between the British and French, the collapse of French power in America, the gradual development of the psychology of separation and independence of the English colonies, and closes with the exploits of George Rogers Clark, which put an end to British domination in the Mid West.

Doctor Schlarman tells what happened, as it happened, he says, and in many instances in the words of men who saw it happen, making extensive use of contemporary letters and memoirs, most of which are unfamiliar to English readers.

Dr. Schlarman selected the paper and type for his book, to suit his own comfort, demanded the great number of illustrations because he likes books with pictures, and then selected a neighborhood publisher, Mr. Buechler, and supervised the printing and binding, doing all his own proof reading.

Healthful Cleanliness in Every Particle

The extraordinary efficiency and superior quality of Old Dutch make its usefulness unequalled. For all uses listed on the label and many others—cutlery, refrigerators, mirrors, stoves, stone steps, etc., there is nothing else like Old Dutch.

Old Dutch keeps everything spick and span and assures that most important feature of good housekeeping—Healthful Cleanliness. Old Dutch does this by removing the unhealthful invisible impurities as well as all visible dirt.

Old Dutch is composed of a natural detergent of distinctive character, free from harsh, scratchy grit, acid and caustic. To the eye a fine powder—the microscope shows that its particles are flaky and flat shaped. Like thousands of tiny erasers they remove all uncleanliness without scratching. Scratches are catch-alls for dirt and impurities.

As Healthful Cleanliness is the safeguard to health, so Old Dutch is your safeguard to Healthful Cleanliness. There's nothing else like it.

Acrobats Demonstrate Their Act for the Doubting Jury

New York, April 3—Something new in courtroom procedure enlivened the session of the trial of Mae West and 16 others, mostly actors, involved in the presentation of "Pleasure Man," Miss West's play which was closed as objectionable by the police in October 1928.

"Allez-oop!" grunted a tall, stringy man, and a little, chunky man, who a few minutes before had been turning handsprings over a chair in the courtroom to Ember up, leaped nimbly to his shoulders.

The judge in his trailing robe climbed down off the bench, and the jurors left the jury box and crowded around as Herman Lensen and Will Seiler, acrobats, showed them just what they contributed to "Pleasure Man." Their act detectives have testified, was one of the reasons why the police closed the show.

After explaining that they had been doing this same act for three years in vaudeville, Lensen and Seiler went through it twice for the jury today.

Don't Get in a Rut— Use Your Brains!

By LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

People often possess a lot of knowledge but do not know how to use it.

What is intelligence anyway?

One might say that intelligence is the ability of an individual to adjust his thinking to the ever-changing conditions and problems of life.

The gist of this definition is adaptability of what you have to what is needed!

Intelligence is not ability to learn. It is not memory power.

It is not the hind'ul of information stored away in the mind.

These are but a few common conceptions of intelligence but they are psychologically incorrect.

Intelligence is the use all these possessions and abilities and make them adaptable to the unusual conditions of life intelligent.

Indeed, a person may be intelligent whose learning ability is very limited, who has a poor memory, and whose general or special knowledge is meagre. That is why no amount of schooling will necessarily make a person intelligent.

Such training undoubtedly helps, but unless all life's knowledge lends itself readily for use in any circumstances, then one words, is adaptable—it will not promote the intelligence of the individual possessing it.

That also explains why people with meagre educations are often exceedingly intelligent.

They may not know much, but their command of what they know is such that they are able to turn into practical usefulness.

It might add that a person with little knowledge but great intelligence is a far more valuable member of society than a person with a large amount of knowledge and but little intelligence.

Don't worry so much about acquiring new knowledge.

Worry more about applying success fully what you already have.

Let your knowledge come out.

Make your thinking fluid.

Change it when need be.

Always make it more and more adaptable.

So many people do not know how, or do not try to use their minds. A little daily practice makes a lot of difference in the end.

An animal, such as a dog, cannot be said to be intelligent because it always reacts in the same way to the same stimulus. Change the stimulus—that is, the circumstances under which you are observing and testing him—and he does not change in his reactions.

And many people respond in a similar stilted and unintelligent manner. Such persons are not fundamentally intelligent.

To be sure, there are many degrees of intelligence and there are those who are intelligent in one set of reactions and not in another. A man may react intelligently in business but not intelligently at home.

But surely knowledge itself is not intelligence.

The Make-Believe Wife

A Tale of Marriage, Suspicion, Jealousy and an Unexpected Ending

by Kathleen Norris

"I know it," she agreed calmly. "But none of them will be as good as yours!"

Hugh smiled, but he was a shaky smile, and he spoke: He raked over his eyes suddenly; as though the pleasant big room, with its sparkling breakfast table and its flowers and sunshiny windows hurt him.

"You—you like it?" he said thickly.

"I know I am!" she asserted, a little timidly, not quite sure of his feeling. "But—but I did it suddenly, Hugh, on an impulse—just looking at them, and thinking how wonderful they were! Do I see?" Hugh said.

"It would—it would make you happier to have Bert get it, would it?" Beatrice asked, encouraged. "It would mean work for him, Hugh, and interest, and that he was proud of himself—"

"—of Hugh said vaguely, relenting at her.

"You've said over and over that you didn't care a rap about it!" Beatrice reminded him, faintly anxious.

Instead of answering he narrowed his eyes on her pensively.

"Bee, I've been such a fool!" he said.

"We've all been fools more or less, she conceded. "But, Hugh, I—I want to be humble—I couldn't be patient—last night, with Aileen smiling at me so triumphantly," she pleaded.

"No, no, I see that. I was wrong!"

"I was sad Mlot ever to think that drawing-room plans would get us anywhere!" she said. "But, then, last night, Hugh, when you were so cold, so cruel to me," Beatrice went on, remembering, "I just seemed to snap in my head—I went crazy. I hadn't failed you, I hadn't done anything wrong, and to have you suspect me—to have you think—" She was getting excited again.

"I'm so sorry, Bee!" he said simply.

For a minute she was silent, her fingers tight on his; her cheek against his, and her eyes averted.

"Hugh, something happened to me in that room last night," she began again suddenly. "Something that took my soul right out of me, and twisted it, and put it back again—ooh great! enormous size—"

"I came Alive—" she said, in the silence.

"There, in that study," her voice went on presently, "I knew what you meant to me. I was suddenly, Hugh jealous, more jealous than you'd ever been, I think! I hated Bert because he was your son because you adored him from the first moment of his life. I loathed Aileen because she is one of your oldest friends—because she was Alice's friend. I thought of Alice, and it suffocated me."

She had twisted about to face him; her face was ready.

"Bee, my dear—my dearest!" he said. "Can you conceive of anything so absurd, so fantastic as that you should be jealous of me?"

"I see, though," she said decisively. "In that one moment—whatever it was, Hugh, I knew that I was—that I am—your wife," she said timidly, feeling her way with words, trying to make him understand. "I realized then that I had been cheated, either because I was so much younger than you, Hugh, or because of some lack in me," she said, "cheated out of all the pangs of the true loving; the anxiety and jealousy and suspicion, and—it there were then that never again could I take it all for granted—as I've been taking it for granted all this year—that you, that is your room too, and my place and my place at your side—"

"Why, Bee! Why, my dearest!" he stammered, as she was stopped by tears.

"Do you—do you understand me?" They looked at each other.

"I think I understand that you are trying to tell me—that you love me, Bee?" he said, clearing his throat.

"I do love you, as a wife, as a very much spoiled baby."

Then it was, there, he agreed after a long look that brought the color to Beatrice's face.

"And—" she glanced about the room, "we are on our honeymoon," she stated.

Hugh did not answer. He leaned forward and put his elbows on his knees and played his fingers tightly across his eyes.

Beatrice stood up and touched her lips to his hair.

"So that," she said, "is that."

"And the check cats who ruled the Kreutzmann, Bert?" Hugh asked, looking up.

"We don't care about anything but each other and having tea alone in my sitting-room and going down to the lake wedding with your mother on Sundays! Oh, but listen—those birds make all those noises every day! We didn't look! The awards were in the paper today! The Kreutzmann Memorial, Hugh," she added as he looked at her, and her sudden change of mood, frankly. "The judges were to send a sealed decision to the papers last night! I forgot it."

"This is the day sure enough!" Hugh agreed. They were tearing" wildly through the papers now.

Beatrice found it first.

"Hugh Challoner, he's got it!" she gasped.

"Bert?"

"Bert! Oh, Hugh, he's got it! It says Bert," says Beatrice and A. Hoskins Challoner of the firm of Challoner, Bennett and Flint," Beatrice went on, in a puzzled voice, "but it must mean Bert, for your plans didn't go in!"

"Let me see—" Hugh was reading with her. "Well, by golly, that's right!" he said, in what was strange emotion and excitement and indecision for Hugh.

"It means that Bert—" Beatrice suggested.

"I suppose—" Hugh said, looking off the paper—" I suppose we shall come in for the end of these revelations someday, but it seems queer to me, Bee, it may mean me. My plans did go in!"

"Your plans—?" she stammered.

"Yes. Let me explain: about three weeks ago—some time after I had found the plans—Philo Applethwaite called at my office. Applewhite, you know is the judges in the contest. Philo's a great friend of mine: we studied together at the Beaux Arts. I had told him a long time ago that I intended to try for the prize, and he came to find out why I had not competed. I told him the whole story, almost. Then I thought it was best that who had—Perhaps I was bitter, don't know. At any rate, Philo insisted on taking my plans along with him. He said he'd see if I would cheat to the fact they had been completed by the specified date; I told him I had just touched them since the day they were finished, and that was in early part of August, as I remember, five days before I sailed. But he said he'd do it, and seemed a good deal upset about what I had told him, and while assuring me that nothing would be brought of it, gave me to understand that he would explain to his colleagues, the other judges in the contest, that some unusual circumstances had prevented me from getting my plans in by the stated date."

"Hugh and you never told me!"

"I didn't think they had a chance, my dear—that the judges would give them the slightest consideration, frankly—" his voice could not express a note of pride and satisfaction as he looked at the paper, "but they did," he finished amply.

"And do you mean—do you mean—" Her face was white. She made a gesture of her shoulder toward the paper. "That you've won?" she gasped.

"I—I look like it, Bee."

She was on her feet, her arms about him.

"Oh, Hugh, Hugh, I'm so proud of you!" she sobbed, pressing him to her. "I'm so proud of you!"

"You—you just thought Bert won," he protested bewilderedly. "But you didn't care!"

"Oh, Bert!" She laughed, and wiped her eyes and choked again. "It's over a name, Hugh—" she said in an awed whisper. "And you've won! Hugh! You believe it now?"

"No, I really can't, and that—that we're happy again," he admitted with his artless, kind smile.

"And now what do we do, Hugh? Can't we—go home, and see your mother, and have them all congratulate you?" Beatrice asked, childishly glowing her nose and wiping her eyes again and looking at him expectantly.

"Congratulate us, Yes. We'll go home soon," Hugh said, over her chair and knelt down and put his arms about her, and she laid her head on his shoulder, so that their eyes were close together. "Bee, never to make you unhappy any more!" he said solemnly, thickly.

The blue eyes smiled with Beatrice's new wisdom.

"Oh, yes, you'll make me unhappy again," she said, "and jealous and suspicious and cruel! We'll even have children some day, Hugh, and I'll have grandmothers, and they'll disapprove, she submitted with a sudden sparkle of mischief.

"Never!"

"Now that—" she laid her fragrant cheek against his; her voice was rich with happiness, "that's the ending, Hugh," she said, wearily, exquisitely, "forever!"

"That's heaven!" Hugh added slowly.

At about seven o'clock that night it was raining again in North Underhill, and Bert could hear quickly in at the side door of the old Challoner house—the door that opened into the pantry hall—was spattered and damp with rain. He was just taking the violets and primroses in silver bowls.

"Any news?" Bert asked.

"There's all the news in the world," said Nelly placidly. "Mrs. Kreutzmann at six, five minutes after you was here before, and anything like the laughing and running around there was in it you never see. They'd stopped at your grandmother's, and there'd been a busy time—" Nelly indicated the flowers she was making the whole room smell sweet.

"Home, eh?" Bert said blankly.

"I asked Mrs. Challoner was she tired," Nelly went on, "and she said she just went off in a gale! 'What time'll we have you?' I says, and she's dancing all night at the Lamberts' in the morning—maybe that would tire you,' I says 'and maybe not!' Oh, no, she says, as quiet as you are this minute, Mr. Bert. 'I went down to the city,' she says. 'And Mr. Challoner and Hugh came down and brought me home!'"

Nelly gave a laugh of triumph and relish. Her comparison had been an apt one, and Bert's reception perfectly quiet, deadly, palely quiet, watching her. She put some snipped stems of primroses into a pail, and wiped the crystal bowls one by one with a white cloth, and only of an audience, not noting him at all.

"However, she wanted dinner upstairs, and Emma built the a good fire for it's going to snow, if you ask me, and the paper said, 'Heavy storms with wind and possible snow!' Nelly resumed. "So she fixed herself all up there on her couch, like she loves to do, and they had this here on and that see out and then that one on and the other off, until you'd die at them! And then nothing would do but Mr. Challoner had his jacket and he got him for his birthday on, and his slippers, and I'm his chair, and her brushing her hair all over her head, like one of them Fyrelian dolls—and all this while the greatest laughing going on—mind you—"

"What—what did she wear, Nelly?"

"For Heaven's sake! Wouldn't you think they'd hold their heads up, and not loop over like string?" Nelly muttered, of the flowers.

"I'm dining with my grandmother tonight," Bert pursued, "and off on morrow morning."

"Well, it isn't Europe, anyway," Nelly said politely.

"No, I couldn't go—to Europe," Bert answered. She did not hear him. He called Emma to help her carry the potatoes.

Bert went out the side door again. He stopped, in the wet autumn garden, and looking up at the line of lighted windows overhead among the thinning branches. His father's room, and then the square dim light of Hugh's dressing-room, and then six glowing corner windows in a row, all in Beatrice's upstairs sitting-room. Inside were firelight and lamplight; Hugh deep in his newspaper, Beatrice and happy and waiting for dinner, Beatrice—radiant, triumphant, was the woolly white, her bare feet showing under the light silk flower-decorated brushing her mass of silky copper curls; like an aureole, like that of a Italian doll—

Bert stood in the wet garden a long long time. The rain was cold and light and sparse—already turning to sleet. It was pattering audibly on the packed wet leaves under the old trees; suddenly all the lights dimmed in the house, up and down the decorous streets, unfriendly, wintry lights in night, twinkling through sleet.

After a while he turned up his collar, and turned toward his grandmother's house, a few blocks away, and began to walk rapidly, his head sunk between his shoulders.

DUNBURGH AIDS TOURISTS

Edinburgh—Plans to contradict the false reports periodically circulated during the summer months that Edinburgh's hotels are full and are unable to receive tourists, are being put forward by the Edinburgh Hotels Defence Association which recently held its first general annual meeting here. The association was formed a few years ago largely for this purpose. A scheme of effective advertising has been devised, including the establishment of central bureaux in the city to advise visitors where accommodations can be had.

"I always recommend Palmolive Soap ... for a very good reason"

says LINA CAVALIERI

Former opera star, now a celebrated Parisian beauty specialist

Unless the pores are freed of impurities, dirt, oil, make-up . . . serious blemishes appear. Olive oil, in soap, removes the accumulations gently and safely.

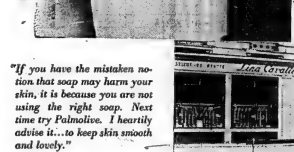
LINA CAVALIERI! Romantic figure in the world of opera; important figure, today, in the world of beauty culture. Born in Rome, Mme. Cavalieri was singing in opera in the great cities of Europe and America by the time she was 18. Today, she has turned to beauty culture, with salons not only in Paris, but in the smartest hotels of Europe's most fashionable resorts: The Hotel Carlton, Cannes; the Hotel Ritz, Paris; the Hotel de Paris, Monte Carlo, and another shop — opened last summer — at Le Touquet. When she finds Palmolive "safe, soothing, healthy for the skin" every woman must listen with interest.

—Madame Cavalieri's treatment

"Before retiring, of course, use Palmolive. Massage its lather gently into the skin of face and throat. Rinse with warm water, gradually changing to cold. Then, I advise the application of my Camphorated Jelly No. 9.

"In the morning, cleanse the skin thoroughly with this same soap. Then use my 'Lorion Onctueuse' No. 7 before applying my cream No. 5 for neutral skins.

"By following this simple treatment, you will keep that schoolgirl complexion."



A total of more than 19,800 professional beauty specialists advise their patrons to use Palmolive Soap in preference to any other for bath as well as face. Why? "

Palmolive is made of the oils of palm and olives, famous for generations as the greatest natural cosmetic oils. Its color is the natural color of those same oils. It requires no heavy perfumes to mask rancid fat odors. Vegetable oil soaps are safest—and best, most soothing on the skin. Follow Lina Cavalieri's advice—use Palmolive.

"If you have the mistaken notion that soap may harm your skin, it is because you are not using the right soap. Next time try Palmolive. I heartily advise it...to keep skin smooth and lovely."

CARTWRIGHTS HAVE ENJOYED LEADING PART

Family Prominent In Canada's Governmental Life For Years

(Written for the Canadian Press by C. H. Williamson)

Kingston, Ont., April 3.—The recent deaths at Kingston of Mrs. Van Straubenzee, 90, widow of Colonel Bowyer Van Straubenzee, 100th British Regiment, and Miss Francis Cartwright, affords one the opportunity of telling to the younger generation of Canadians something of the outstanding part the Cartwright family took from 1792 to the present day in helping to shape the political government of this country.

Mrs. Van Straubenzee was the granddaughter of Richard Cartwright, a United Empire Loyalist, who became one of the first English residents of Upper Canada in the early days and also became one of the first members of the executive council of Upper Canada under Governor Sir John Simcoe in 1792 at Kingston. Miss Cartwright was the daughter of Sir Richard J. Cartwright, a grandson of the founder of the Cartwright family in Canada.

The little building, in which that Upper Canada council first met here 138 years ago, still stands on Queen Street but below St. Paul's Anglican Church. The founder of the Cartwright family here was the son of an English father and a Dutch mother. He had the vision of the statesman, as is recorded that in 1793 as a member of the council, he voiced his objection to the council calculating its measures as much with a view to patronage and private endowment as to the prosperity of the young colony. He prophesied that such a policy would sow seeds of civil discord and perhaps lay the foundation of future revolutions. His fears were justified by the Rebellion of 1837. He did not live to see these troublous times in both upper and lower Canada for he died in 1815, the year in which Wellington defeated Napoleon at Waterloo.

It appears that Governor Simcoe had planned and outlined a military road from one end of Upper Canada to the other, to which he gave the name of Dundas Street, supposedly with a view to accomplishing his idea of fixing the capital on the present site of London. Hon. Richard Cartwright is one of his letters, protested against the employment of a hundred men of the "Rangers" in cutting a road from the head of Lake Ontario to the River Francois (now Thames) where there was not a single inhabitant. Instead of employing them "in the service for which they are ostensibly raised, of opening roads and building bridges between the different settled parts of the country."

"But," he further remarks, "this is a business that the inhabitants are left to do for themselves as well as they can."

It was due to the Hon. Richard Cartwright and his business partner, Hon. Robert Hamilton, that the famous Bishop Strachan came to Canada. Cartwright and Hamilton in the year 1799 sent to Scotland for a competent tutor for their sons. John Strachan, then aged 24, taught a small parish school in Pitlochrie, accepted the post and arrived at Kingston on the last day of 1799. Mr. Strachan, although a student for the ministry of the Church of Scotland, connected himself with the Anglican Church and became one of its greatest leaders in Canada.

The grandson of the founder of the Cartwright family in Canada, Sir Richard J. Cartwright, took part in Canadian Confederation deliberations as a young man. He broke with Sir John A. Macdonald and joined with the Liberals, eventually becoming a member of the cabinet of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1896.

Members of the Cartwright family have lived in Kingston for nearly a century and a half, and recently another descendent of the family, Henry L. Cartwright, of Toronto, settled here to practice law.

DIVORCE BILL IS CARRIED BY 13

Second Reading Brings Tribunal One Step Nearer

OTTAWA, April 3— Divorce courts for the citizens of Ontario is just around the corner.

By a majority of 13—an even 100 votes to 87—the House of Commons Tuesday evening approved the principle of establishing in Ontario courts for the dissolution of marriage.

A few minutes before, by a vote of 98 to 85 the House threw out an amendment designed to block consideration of the Ontario question this session. This amendment, moved by George Spotton, Conservative, member for North Huron, would have given the bill a six months' hoist.

Thus, definite majorities in two successive divisions brought a virtual climax to a long and bitter struggle begun four years ago in the Senate and waged with zeal in the Commons by western members, headed by J. S. Woodsworth, Winnipeg Labortie, who is neither of the courts bill.

The vote gave the bill second reading and it now should have the final approval of both Houses of Parliament within a month. Pitfalls lurk in the committee stage, through which the bill next must pass, but it is confidently anticipated now that its supporters will master all parliamentary opposition.

Premier King, who like Hon. R. B. Bennett, Opposition leader, voted for the bill in the election, has declared that the matter of having the bill come into effect only upon the request of the Ontario Government. It is expected that an amendment to this effect will be moved in committee but supporters of the bill likely will present a united front against it. The bill will likely reach committee stage in private members' hour Friday night.

STUDY CONTENTS OF FRENCH TEXT BOOKS

Montreal, April 3 (CP).—The joint committee representing the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Montreal Board of Trade, named to study text books used in Quebec schools, met and decided that its investigation shall be thorough and that more criticism of the books shall not suffice, but that constructive suggestions shall be made to the authorities at the proper time for needed remedies.

Search for pro-Americanism in histories and for injustices to Canada in geographies and other books is to take place at once. Each member of the committee is studying one book.

TALL HAT PASSES ITS HEYDAY IS GENERAL VIEW

London, April 3 (CP).—The tall hat has had its day. We have this on the word of so eminent authority as Lord Ullswater Viscount. But Lord Greenwood is one of the few men who still loves the tall hat.

His Lordship was attending a dinner in connection with the Canadian section of the British Industries Fair the other night. A few nights before he had been present at a match between the Canadian ice hockey team and Oxford and Cambridge universities. During the match a shot from puck struck Lord Greenwood's tall hat, and pretty fell demolished it. By a most fortunate circumstance Lord Greenwood's face was just saved from serious injury.

At a dinner a few nights later a small uniformed messenger appeared with a hat-box. Inside was a brand new tall hat, a gift from the Canadian hockey team in replacement of the hat which they had unwittingly destroyed.

One of the leading west end hatters declares that the general use of the automobile has killed the tall hat in London. Men do not like their hats to touch the roof of the car. Very few men, even in the legal or medical profession, wear tall hats nowadays when going about their usual occupations.

SEA FOODS NEEDED TO SUPPLY IODINE

Toronto, April 3 (CP).—Sea foods and fish meals are better means of supplying iodine to the diet than iodized salt, in the opinion of Miss A. L. Laird, speaking before the Household Science Alumnae of the University of Toronto, Saturday, on several queries put to her by the members. One of them concerned the value of iodized salt. Potassium iodide was different in form, as compared with, from the iodine in these foods and it had been shown that no matter how much iodine was taken in sea foods, it never proved injurious to the system.

Another question dealt with the use of twice-cooked meat. The possible injurious effect of twice-cooked meats lay, Miss Laird believed, in the danger of fatty acid. She pointed out that the trend was now getting away from roughage in the diet. It had sometimes been found that bran and tough vegetables, instead of being helpful in cases of constipation and similar ailments, were the reverse.

Miss Charlotte Valentine discussed the manufacture of artificial silks. All artificial silks, she said, had their basis in cellulose. Garments made from these silks should be carefully laundered with little friction, she explained, and the water should be lukewarm. When they were pressed a cloth should always be used over the fabric.

WANT RESEARCH WORKERS

London, April 3 (CP).—Urging the demand for an army of skilled research workers, the Medical Research Council, in their report, called attention to "our almost complete impotence" in face of such deadly diseases as measles and yellow fever, among many others. Experiments carried out by Dr. Oye and Dr. Purdy in testing the supposed value of brad scrubside as a curative drug have not been successful.

WOULD FREE WIVES

MOSCOW, April 2—A plan submitted to the Soviet Government recommends the freeing of wives and mothers from domestic duties and children they may have equal opportunity with men in carrying out the Government's industrialization plan.

The proposal, worked out by a special commission for improving the conditions of labor and life," also aims at "collectivization of city life," by encouraging collective forms of labor, rest and recreation among the city proletariat.

RUTH PLEASES PILOT SHAWKEY

"Busting Bambino" Clouting the Ball Hard in Exhibition Series

San Antonio, Texas, April 1—George Herman Ruth gave his greatest exhibition of baseball since he signed his $80,000 contract against George Burns' San Antonio Bears, before an enthusiastic crowd of close to 8,0 0 fans at the local ball park yesterday afternoon.

Perhaps it was the San Antonio climate that inspired the "home run king" and author to cut loose for the first time this year. But whatever the was, Babe Ruth was himself.

And when Ruth is feeling good the Ruthian circus that travels each year through the south is a busy concern. The score was 14 to 4, but that doesn't matter, as the Yanks are expected to beat the minor league opposition without any trouble. So we'll give you a close-up of the "home run king's" one day stand in the home of the Alamo.

There was a wild shout from the crowd as the Babe strutted up to the plate in the first inning with Mark Koenig resting on first base. The Babe swung from the ground, or wherever home run kings swing from, and the ball sailed high, wide and handsome for his fourth home run of the trip.

But that was only the start of his best afternoon of baseball in the train ing trip. There were no more home runs but the Babe did something different nearly every time that he came to the plate. He walked in the third inning. He rammed a vicious single to centrefield in the fifth. He walked again the seventh. Then in the eighth he smashed a vicious drive against the fence in left field for a

TWO KILLED IN MOTOR CAR CRASH

Ottawa April 2 — Two persons were instantly killed, and a third injured late Saturday when their automobile left the Montreal-Hull Highway and crashed into a telephone pole on a concrete near Hull. The dead are: Paul Martin, aged 30, and William Venzina aged 44. Albert Venzina, aged 33, was injured. All are Ottawans.

The men employed as house painters were returning to Ottawa via Hull after spending the afternoon in Gatineau Point. Seemingly the driver, Martin, could not negotiate the sharp turns op posite Notre Dame Cemetery, and was forced to the side of the highway, his light car striking the pole with such force that it turned over twice and landed right side up in the opposite direction about 35 feet from the pole. There were no eye-witnesses to the accident, but cemetery workmen heard the crash and were at the scene in a few minutes.

LIGHT TRADING SENT WHEAT DOWN

Winnipeg, March 31 (CP)—Under light trading wheat values slipped off slightly at the opening of the grain exchange today, marking down hours ranging from 3-8 to 3-4 of cent. Fractions movements comprised early developments on the market and the early tendency seemed to be toward more than fractional losses. May was 1-2 to 2-4 cent lower at $1.60 3-8 to 3-8. July showed drop of 1-2 to 2-4 cent at $1.11 5-8 to 3-8 and October was 3/8 to 5-8 cent down at $1.13 1-8 to $1.12 7-8.

SOFT MELODIES INSTEAD OF HARSH BELL RINGING

Memphis, Tenn., April 2.—If sleepers in some of the towns along the Southern Railway awake some night and hear a calliope playing "Casey Jones," it simply means Mike Brady, veteran engineer, is blowing for a crossing. The Southern Railway has complaints from residents of towns between Memphis and Sheffield, Ala., that the shrill blasts of locomotives were disturbing their slumbers. The railroad decided to give them music. So a calliope whistle was installed on the engine Brady runs. Residents of town on the Southern were amazed one night when Mike's engine snorted by playing snatches from popular songs and ditties.

TRACES OF OLD FOREST FOUND

PORT WILLIAM, April 2—Prehistoric coniferous trees have been dug up in the course of excavations for a sewer on Gore street, believed to be the remains of an ancient forest on the top of the Kam River. The wood is well preserved, but water-logged. Workmen have also run into a deposit of fine sand, to prove it could be used just as it is carried from the trench. Fragments of shells have also been unearthed, apparently those of molluscs which lived in the littoral shallows of byzone years.

The Daily Mail, Conservative, also reports that a draft formula was sent to Paris, adding that Foreign Minister Briand expressed approval or it in general terms.

The Mail thinks that the French Government's approval is therefore probable.

FIFTY YEARS OF CONSTANT ENTERPRISE

THE TEST-HOUSE BOY

The young fellow you see here is called the "test-house boy." His job is to collect samples of the gasolines and oils running through every still in the Imperial refinery at Sarnia and bring these samples to be tested. Others like him are at work in each of the six great refineries which Imperial has built across Canada.

The "test-house boy" goes back fifty years to the days when Imperial Oil was a new company producing chiefly kerosene for oil lamps. Its effort then was to make a kerosene that was pure, clear and safe to use. The "test-house" was the place where these qualities were proven.

The old test-house is now a chain of laboratories but the principle of perfection which the test-house boy represents has not changed. Just as the kerosene had to be perfect before Imperial would sell it, so now the gasoline and motor oils which Imperial makes today must pass a standard of perfection before they leave the refinery.

That is why people have learned to trust Imperial Oil products and that is why Imperial has grown from a few hundred men in one small refinery to more than nine thousand men—serving every corner of Canada — ranging the world from the Arctic to Colombia and Peru — striving constantly for new achievements.

Marvelube is Imperial's finest motor oil.

Imperial Premier and Imperial Esso are its best gasolines.

You will find that nothing finer can be put in your car.

CALL CROW HUNT IN WEST ONTARIO

War on Alleged Feathered "Robbers" Declared in Niagara Dist.

St. Catharines, April 2 — A crow hunt is to take place in Niagara district Saturday next. It has been organized by the recently formed Niagara District Game and Fish Protective Association. Members of the association believe that the crow is a nuisance and especially so in Niagara district, where it attacks pheasants and their nests. The real menace, it is affirmed, lies in the fact that the crows eat the pheasants' eggs. Saturday next the association is inviting every holder of a gun license, whether a member of the association or not, to meet in front of the Y.M.C.A. at 2 o'clock. The party will leave by automobile for the woods, and their endeavor is to destroy as many crows as possible.

"Come on, boys, bring your guns and enjoy some good sport, and help destroy one of the greatest robbers of pheasants' and ganebirds' eggs," is the announcement.

Girl Unafraid

The Tragedy of a Woman Who Defied Convention in the Name of Love

By Gladys Johnson

During the long drive up to the cabin in his Fred Eastwood, Ardeth had the sensation of moving through some dramatic story.

Her life held no precedent for anything like this. The pleasures, the little holidays which Jeanetta and Cecile — Phyllis Hawkins, even Mary Eastwood — took as their natural due, held the thrill of novelty for her.

Was that really Ardeth Farrell, leaning luxuriously back in the big car as it climbed steadily into the mountains?

Just to intensify the pleasure of the moment, she let her thoughts drift back. Suppose she could have foreseen this in the gloomy days of the Barrelton flat. Then it had been a step to go out driving at night in Neil's custom Ford. How striking Jack and had been that young girl — Estelle — Bet — Nell, her first "beau" — Neil whom she had vaguely thought she would one day marry — they had taken on the dim outline of a dream.

"The World is Mine"

But what she thought of Ken, at that very moment impatiently awaiting them, she ignored with a deep and heady happiness as though golden wine bubbled through her veins.

Wood grinding.

Glancing down at her, Fred Eastwood, who though young had thought and paid for the whole countryside.

She crinkled amber eyes at him. "I have! Mountains and trees and that little brook we passed over back there. And that patch of snow. Especially that patch of snow. Just think—I never saw snow before today."

She gave an ecstatic wiggle. "Life is a lot—" Fred afterward confided to his wife. "Like a little kid that had never had many good times."

Many snow, not just white patches hurking in sheltered places, but long banks of it. Great masses of cotton, weighing down the dark branches of fir and pine.

Before long the whole country lay under a cloak of white and the wheels of the car crunched on the snow as though they spun through coarse salt. "The Gang's All Here!"

When they reached the cabin the air of unreality deepened. They might have been moving through a Christmas card, so picturesque was the build ing with heavy masses of snow clinging to its gables and dormer windows.

At the sound of the car's horn one casement window flew open and Mary and Phyllis Hawkins stuck out their heads with shrill shouts of welcome.

As the same moment Tom and Ken appeared on the porch, wearing rough trousers heavy sweaters and high laced boots. Ken reached the car first and, lifting the girl carried her over the wooden porch streaked with mud and half melted snow.

He poised his laughing face a few inches above her own. "Hello, my girl!" he whispered. "I've a good mind to kiss you right here and give them all a thrill!"

Mary Eastwood's voice sounded behind them in mock severity. "Ken put that poor girl down and let her get her breath. Here—if you feel so strong, Bella Tom pack those suitcases upstairs."

And still the glorious sense of unreality persisted. A long living room, its low, wide windows framing vistas of snowy hillsides and dark pines. Comfortable wicker furniture, side consoles of tartan red as the windows. On the walls hung a couple of Indian blankets to supply a note of warm color. Altogether a restful, friendly room, thought the girl. Nothing to tell her of that event and history time to come, when this room would wring from the strongest decision of her life ...

Mary Eastwood swept upstairs on a flood of words.

"Let take your snow things—you did bring sport clothes, didn't you, Ardeth? You won't have a bit of fun until you change. We're going out on the toboggan. We were there all morning. It's gorgeous fun!"

Ardeth changed her clothes in the small bare bedroom assigned to her, pulling on the new sports rig with hands made clumsy with joyous excitement...

When she had bought these things the express had frightened her a bit. A silly thing to do—when she needed dresses for every day. But the thought of Ken turned the tide. The other girls would dress appropriately. She couldn't let Ken be ashamed of her.

Tweed breeches and high laced elk skin boots. White sweater bordered with black and red. A white cap pulled down on her bright hair until it framed her glowing face. She was glad she had brought the things when she looked in the mirror.

Seven pairs of eyes leaped toward her as she came down the stairs into the living room—appraising, admiring, caressing ...

Bill Lane, a tall thin fellow with horn rimmed glasses, spoke. "I saw her first. Give me the first ride down the slide, Miss Carroll."

"Oh, no you don't." There was unnecessary vigor in Tom's voice. "I asked her by here!"

They clattered out on the wooden ells at differing ages ...

Miss Nobody of Nowhere

For the first few seconds the other two girls held aloof, resolved to be offending that this girl who worked for pennies should be included in their number. But Mary Eastwood's master-of-fact manner, above all the attitude of the men helped them shake up their minds. Whoever tried to snub Ardeth Carrol was going to find herself in the discard. And much was easy to see. That settled it for Phyllis and Maida.

The toboggan had been built on a long hill skirting the small town a little from the cabin. At the bottom of the grade a snorting, important little donkey-engine pulled a sled cable up to the crest.

Suddenly snatching Ardeth's hand, Ken ran her laughing and breathless over to the sleds. He hooked a bobsled over the cable and pulled two more with him as it started up the grade, grinning derisively at the outraged Tom who had hailed after them.

"Think I was going to let old Tom get away with my girl?" Ken asked triumphantly.

"Miss Ha," Deemed as "Ha."

Laughter and strained bubbling in Ardeth's heart. Glorious, to be young and-adored. To be sitting cross-legged on the sled on the sled with Ken, her cheeks glowing in the crisp cold air.

They were hung between heaven and earth on the snowy slope—between the crowd at the bottom of the grade and the little group at the top.

Ken bent his head close to her own. "Miss me?" he ordered, his eyes murmuring with love and laughter.

Long after Ardeth remembered the incident in its smallest detail. No foreboding shill to tell her of the future. Nothing to prepare her... She sighed at his and of her happiness and thought it was the beginning.

FEW PEOPLE REALIZE POSSIBILITIES THAT LIE IN THEIR OWN MINDS SAYS NOTED PSYCHOLOGIST

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

This world of ours is really very commonplace.

Most of what we think and do is very average, trite and ordinary.

I do not true that the ordinary, the mediocre and sometimes even the vulgar to a greater or less degree, dominate much more than they should our daily intellectual fare?

Take ordinary conversation for instance. Is not pain as much small talk with little or no brain behind it? Is it true, indeed, that we do not like to think?

Is thinking a burden to us?

Do we wish merely to pass the time and be entertained?

That there is a distinct place for entertainment in all our lives there can be no question.

But entertainment need not be commonplace.

Entertainment can be novel, rarified, interesting.

It can do something more than merely pass the time.

Entertainment can actually enrich our lives.

So long as we subscribe to cheap and ordinary things—no matter what they may be—just so long do we fail in deriving the most possible out of our opportunities.

The mind is a machine and its product is thought. Remember that!

It is the normal action of the brain is to think!

If we fall into the habit of not thinking—only or receiving and recording impressions—then we are not using our brain as we should nor are we getting the best we can out of it.

Try, for a change, to set yourself against the things that appeal to the popular taste and, instead, become associated with better books, better place, better pictures, better people.

You will soon learn that their association are more lasting and fill a real void in your mind.

They will make you think!

They will inspire you!

They will teach you life!

They will show you how to enjoy life!

Don't be commonplace, but don't, on the other hand, swing the pendulum too far the other way in the direction of the unknown.

Few people realize the possibilities that lie in their own minds and especially in that portion of it which we call the emotional side.

But dormant, sleeping areas must be awakened if weare to discover the joys they may yield.

Try, therefore, to exercise as many brain cells as possible in order that you may live your life as whole, as directed, and as deeply as possible.

When your interest flags it is a sign that you are at least a little behind with your mental and emotional fare.

That is the time to try and blaze new trails, thereby making of your thinking a glorious adventure.

Remember that the common-place stale.

It is an old Japanese belief that the world was created in an egg before the creation, which egg was broken by a bull.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

BRINGING HIM AROUND

By
Corona Remington

(Copyright, 1929, International Features Service, Inc.

John Armstrong whistled as he started around the big verandah and up the two stone steps that led to the front door of his one room and kitchenette apartment.

The fast that this front door was a dismantled side window, that the entire "apartment" had once been the second living room of his mother's large old house and that there was scarcely space to turn around in it without tumbling over something—all these things meant nothing to John Armstrong. His mind was pleasantly focused on the thought that as soon as he pushed open the door he would be greeted by the fragrant odors of cooking and by an incredibly diminutive wife who had to stand on tiptoes to kiss him.

Sometimes she would rush at him from behind the door and smile gale of laughter she would duck and dodge when he tried to kiss her, but of course he got her at last and held her captive for a moment while he kissed the laughing lips, then with his arm thrown lightly about her they would walk into the little blue and white kitchenette, flopper when they were ready when she got home at a little past five, but appetizing when cooked. Gay china from the tencent store, refreshingly like enough that Dot had embroidered herself. How he loved the fact that after the strenuous day,

But now as he pushed open the door he instinctively felt that Dorothy was not there. He stood a moment, looking about him, then:

"Hey, Dot!" he called, but echo only answered.

Then as he advanced into the room he was astonished to see that Mrs. Murphy bed was still sprawling there, open she covers tossed aside as if she had left them when they had slid out that morning. All the dishes on the breakfast dishes littered the kitchen table. He rushed back out of the door and up the big front steps that led to the verandah. Hurrying across the hall he opened his landlord's front door.

"Where's Dot?" he asked as Mrs Armstrong came lower china.

"I'm sure I don't know," she answered indifferently. "Isn't she home?"

"No. Of course not. Why would I be asking you if she were? When did you see her last? I'm frightened half out of my wits."

"Well, I haven't seen her since yes terday morning," said his mother.

"Well, what did you talk about then?"

Mrs. Armstrong shrugged as she answered: "She said she wanted a little house all her own, but she said that every day for the last twelve months. I told her it was absurd, that it was cheaper to live the way you were and that you were my only boy and I had the intention of giving you up."

"Then what did she say?" Was she angry?"

"Not a bit. She hasn't enough character to get mad."

With a snort of exasperation young Armstrong went back to his own apartment. If a freezer he tried phoning several friends, but Dot had not been seen by any of them. Then just as he was almost frantic, the door opened and in flopped Dot, her arms full of packages from the grocery store.

"Hello, honey," she greeted, dropping onto the davenette and letting her packages fall beside her as she kicked off her pumps. "My feet, my feet!" she said, rocking back and forth.

"Where have you been?" he asked irritably. "You scared me half to death."

"Oh, I got a job," she replied airily. "I brought home some salad-wiches for supper. I knew I'd be too dead to cook."

She started picking up the packages preparatory to going into the kitchen but he pushed her back and dropped down beside her.

"What's it all about?" he asked hercessly.

"It's just that—I get bored staying in this one room all day without a thing to do so I got a job at the hosiery counter at Fleis'. Come and let go eat. I'm starved. Can you put on the kettle and we'll have some tea?"

She cleared away the dirty breakfast dishes and put out a few cups of fresh plates, unwrapped her purchases and placed them on the table. They ate the half stale sandwiches in silence—at least John was silent. Dot kept up a patter of talk about the customers at her counter and the other sales girls. Immediately after supper she undressed and bringing a blanket and pillow with her, stretched out on the davenette.

"Honey, I believe I'll sleep here tonight," she said. "I'm so dead tired I don't think I could rest with any one else and I have to be up-town by eight in the morning."

In a moment she was asleep. It seemed to John as if someone had died. He rose, replace and kept. Finally, he went to bed, but could not sleep. Early the next morning Dot got up and slipped out before breakfast. That evening he did not get home until eight o'clock. If Dot was worried she did not show it. In fact when he came in she was drowsing on the davenette.

"Hey, Dot," he yelled from the door. "I've rented a five-room bungalow across town. If that doesn't give you work enough to keep you from being bored, I'll send a maid, but you've got to quit that darn stocking business."

"Let's go see it," said Dot, jumping up, but all the time trying to keep the ingenuous out of her voice. "I hate to give up my nice job but, of course, my first duty's to my home and husband."

It was after ten when they finally returned to their tiny apartment and tumbling into bed.

"You're such a boss, big man," whispered Dot—not from the davenette—"for then I'm expecting me to live out there and give up my nice job as well!"

"You bet you're going to do both," he said, sleepily, and he never heard Dot's little giggle of triumph because she had discreetly giggled inside.

AERIAL SERVICE IS INCREASING

Winnipeg, April 3 (CP)—Air mail out of Winnipeg has been increasing at the rate of four or five pounds every day, in the mail carried over the prairies, according to Sir Lee Bristol, managing manager of Western Canada Airways, in a recent interview here. He stated that business houses were starting to use the air mail, and a considerable amount of mail which was stamped for air travel was coming from the eastern provinces.

The success of the prairie air mail was shown in the fact that little more than a week's operation the new service was being patronized to a greater extent than any of the air mail services in eastern Canada, Mr. Bristol said. He attributed this in large part to the realization of the saving in time that could be effected over the long distances covered by the air mail service over the prairies.

No passenger service is operated in connection with the carrying of mail by aeroplane and up to the present no definite plans for carrying passengers on the mail aeroplanes have been made, according to the officials of the Western Canada Airways. It is possible, however, that the question of carrying passengers will be considered in the near future.

PUBLIC PENSION PROPOSED

OTTAWA, April 3.—Important recommendations respecting soldiers' pension legislation were submitted to the special committee of the House of Commons Tuesday by Major Charles G. Power, Liberal member for Quebec and Chairman of the committee. Adopted, they would provide for a complete overhauling of the present machinery and the setting up of new machinery. Secrecy or in camera methods of the Board of Pensions Commissioners would be done away with, and pension hearings would take place in open court; the Federal Appeal Board, as such, would be abolished; the soldiers' advocate system now in vogue, which has proved inadequate, would be replaced by a new court, to be called il Pensions Court, would be created, thus restoring confidence of the returned men in the pensions tribunal. Pensioned soldiers were getting a square deal; facilities would be provided for the preservation of cases; returned soldiers would be given the benefit of doubts, and provision would be made for a representative before the Pensions Court of the soldier and the public.

Road Problems Discussed at Shire Hall

RIGHT TO CLEAR VIEW UPON ROADS

Four Townships Represented At Road Builders' Session

TRAFFIC ON THE ROADS

Questions Asked of Provincial Experts At Meeting Here

That more uniform work may be done on county and township roads, which receive assistance from the Provincial Department of Highways, a meeting of all township road superintendents, patrol men of the townships and county patrol men was held today at Shire Hall. Warden Roscoe Vanderwater presided with members of the Roads and Bridges Committee and many members of the county council in attendance. The meeting was suggested by S. H. Fox, superintendent of the county road system, believing that through an open forum with many representatives of the Department of Highways present some useful information could be obtained and some problems, that presented difficulty, could be cleared up.

The meeting was addressed at the morning session by A. E. Pellow, engineer for the Department of Highways for Peterboro, Hastings, Prince Edward, and Northumberland and Durham Counties. This afternoon O. M. Adair spoke on accountings and M. McLeod on Weeds. The meetings were for the townships of Sidney, Thurlow, Tyendinaga and Rawdon, as these are the only townships receiving Provincial assistance.

Mr. Pellows addressed the patrolmen and superintendents on the way roads should be cared for and then the meeting was thrown open for discussion and for asking of questions. One of the patrolmen asked "when the road should be dragged" and the engineer advised the same to drag the roads as much as possible from now until the frost went out of the ground. "If the ruts are not filled in the spring, while the frost is leaving the ground, they will be there for the season," said Mr. Pellows. Motorists have been complaining at many times for being delayed on the road, while road work is being done. Mr. Pellows was of the opinion that motorists should be given a fair break and it would be wise to pull off the road and allow him to pass. The traffic motorwise, though the overhead is mounting on the job at hand.

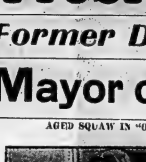
Farm Entrances

One of the big questions discussed was the obligation of townships and counties to supply entrances to farm property, where a new road is being constructed. The engineer explained that the Department made no ruling in this respect but he would say that the farmer could not dictate. The county and townships own the roads, the ditches and the property on their right of way being their own to use to their use fit. Immediately after the explanation was given one of the patrolmen present asked if a farmer left rails in ditch could the road department remove them if they were causing trouble. Mr. Pellows gave an unqualified "yes" to the question. The farmer would be liable under the highway act.

Brush and Vision

The question of removing brush on a farmer's property, which impairs the vision of the motorist was taken up at length. Mr. Pellows was of the opinion that the road engineer could go onto the property and cut out sufficient brush to make the road visible —for example around a curve, but it would be best to reach an agreement with the farmer first. Many farmers, through the county are cutting brush on both sides of the Highway or county road and the question of removing cow passes under the road was taken up. "The department does not encourage this," said Mr. Pellows, "it is probably a matter of right will come up in later years that is not now completed when the right to build is given."

The meeting adjourned at noon to meet again this afternoon to hear Mr. Zoller and Mr. McLeod.



FILTER PLANS ARRIVE IN CITY

The City of Belleville, water purification plant contract drawings have at last arrived and can be seen at the engineer's office in the City Hall. The drawings are on large sheets measuring about 2' x 3'. Each of the 14 sheets are numbered beginning with No. 21 and going to No. 34. Each sheet bears the signature of consulting engineers, Gore, Nasmith & Storrie, of Toronto, and Mr. E. T. Austin, Manager of the Belleville Waterworks department. The drawings were brought to the City Hall last night by Mr. Austin upon his return from Toronto.

BLAME JOY RIDING FOR CAR THEFT

The car owned by James Alexander, 144 Station street, stolen from the yard at the rear of the Crystal Hotel, was recovered late last night one mile north of Shannonville. A motorist passing that way noticed the car abandoned in the ditch and arriving home communicated with Shannonville friends who notified the police. Chief Alexander was called and going to the scene found the car none the worse for its journey. It was driven back to the city under its own power. The police believe the car was used for joy riding and after serving its purpose was abandoned. There has been a number of thefts within the past few weeks in this city and the police working to bring the guilty party or parties to justice. A reward is offered for awaking those responsible for these thefts.

TORY PROVINCES NEED NOT APPLY STATES PREMIER

Not One Five Cent Piece For Them From Fund For Unemployment

CRIES OF 'SHAME'

Premier King Hints At Aid For Provinces Other Than Tory

Ottawa, April 4—With Premier Mackenzie King declaring Thursday that his Administration would not give one cent to any Tory Government in Canada to aid unemployment, and Hon. Hugh Guthrie (Conservative, South Wellington) denouncing that statement as "a bluff aimed at five Canadian Provinces and a bribe proffered to four, the election fever was more apparent in the Commons than at any previous sitting of the present session.

The Premier's hot declaration, hurled in the House of Commons in which his Government admittedly has been subjected to severe pummelling, arousing cries of "shame" from Conservative benches. Hon. Richard B. Bennett, Conservative Leader, shook his head in obvious fury, and shouted to the hubbub which erupted: "And you are Prime Minister."

A Mere Bluff

The Premier, however, who was upholding the argument that Federally collected taxes should not be expended in Provincial fields, merely took a draught from the glass of water on the speaker's desk and commented: "Mr. Tory Friend, it is a bluff."

The excitement of the Premier today, which undoubtedly will become a major issue in the election campaign when everything here believes is about to commence, and the reply of Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Conservative lieutenant thereto, are as follows:

Premier King—"They say: "We ask you to take part of this money you have saved by the taxpayers and give it"—to whom but a Tory Premier in British Columbia, a Progressive Government in Alberta, a Tory Government in Saskatchewan, a Progressive Government in Manitoba, a Tory Government in Ontario, a Tory Government in New Brunswick, and a Tory Government in Nova Scotia . . . BRITISH PRIMATE PROTEST S SOVIET'S ATHEISTIC WAR

During the debate in the British House of Lords on the Soviet Government's war on Christianity, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Most Reverend Cosmo Lang, requested the British Government to bring to the attention of the Russian authorities the several points of British Protests and which would put an end to the persecution. Speaking on behalf of the Government, Lord Parmoor, Lord Brentford, the former Sir Archibald Sinclair, Liberal Leader, shook his head in obvious fury, and shouted to the hubbub which erupted: "And you are Prime Minister."

DR. G. CLINTON FORMER DISTRICT OFFICER OF HEALTH DIED TODAY

Among Leading Medical Practitioners in Belleville. For Many Years

Belleville lost one of her distinguished citizens and well known practising surgeons with the passing of Dr. Gerald Clinton at his home, east Bridge St. today. His death was received with a feeling of regret by people in every walk of life as he was revered by all classes with whom he came in contact. His reputation as a leading surgeon was not confined to Belleville and district as he was known in every corner of the province.

Dr. Clinton was the oldest living graduate of Queen's University, Kingston, having received his diploma over fifty-six years ago.

Following his graduation he was associated with Dr. Yates of Kingston and was the first house surgeon of Kingston General Hospital, besides having been visiting surgeon of the Royal Military College.

Dr. Clinton was the scion of a distinguished English family, his grandfather, Henry Clinton, having been officer commanding the English forces during the American revolution. His father, John Clinton, was born in England.

Dr. Clinton was identified with a number of medical organization, including the American and British societies, while he was a member of the Provincial and District Boards of Health but retired from both of these offices some years ago. Shortly after his graduation he practised in the town of Deseronto, afterwards moving to Belleville where he has since resided.

He took an active part in Church affairs and served as Rector's and People's Warden at St. Thomas church of England. He was Past Master of Deseronto Masonic Lodge and a member of the Belleville Bowling Club.

He leaves to mourn his loss his wife, who was formerly Miss Lillie Holmes and one daughter, Miss Jean Clinton.

The lad was grimy from coal dust and was also tired and hungry. He was taken to the police station, for a wash and a good feed. Today an officer from Brockville will be in the city to take the young boy back to his parents. The boy stated to the reporter during the trip was without accomplice but he was very cold and the coal dust in the car made it difficult to breathe at times.

NAVAL PARLEY MAY ADJOURN WITH THREE POWER AGREEMENT

(Canadian Press)

London, April 4—Signing of a three power pact by the United States, Great Britain and Japan and quick adjustment of the naval conference was said in an authoritative quarter today to be quite possible. This would involve leaving the knotty question of French security and the Franco-Italian parley to be signed in other fields, and would provide so that France and Italy would be in a position to sign as soon as these difficulties have been ironed out.

INTERESTING PAPERS

This was a bi-weekly sheet published every Wednesday and Saturday morning and the proprietors name is given as McCullough & Company. The editorial in the issue is of particular interest, containing some hot-headed comments on the municipal election of that year. The second paper is an edition of the Hastings Intelligencer, solidly styled a political, commercial and literary journal. The paper is dated Wednesday, October 10th, 1860, and was a weekly publication, edited by E. McLes, Victoria Buildings. Both papers are in the property of Mr. Ab. Connor. Kyle Hoarse, and no doubt Mr. Connor will gladly show them to any interested party.

POLICE INSPECT CRASHED CARS

Accident Occurred At Corner of William and Dundas Streets.

The police investigated an accident at the corner of William and Dundas street early last night. G. H. Smith, Belleville street was proceeding east on Dundas street and had turned onto William street going north when a car driven by Morley Smith, 19 Geddes, also going east on Dundas street, struck G. H. Smith's car near the front left fender throwing the car up on the curb, breaking the axle and the front wheel. It is alleged by the police that G. H. Smith's car had its front wheels onto William street, before being struck and that the Morley Smith car showed skid marks on Dundas street a distance of 27 paces before striking the other car.

RIVER BRIDGE PROBLEM KEEN IN YEAR 1832

Hastings Times of October 30, 1832, Tells of Dundas Street Bridge

NINETY-EIGHT YEARS AGO

The Ontario Intelligencer is indebted to Hope McGinnis for a copy of the Hastings Times of Upper Canada, printed on October 30th, 1832. The Times was a weekly, the paper being volume one and the fifth week of issue. An item in the paper shows that the inhabitants of Belleville in that far-off time were interested in the building of a bridge just as residents of a greater and better Belleville are interested at the present time. Of course they did not have to contend with a heavy motor traffic but the loads that the teams drew were as big a problem as the City Council has today in determining how strong the bridge should be. The article does not state the decision, it being one on the question of calling the meeting to discuss the proposition. The article is as follows, "By a notice in to-day's paper, it will be seen, that the inhabitants of Belleville are requested to meet in the court room, on Saturday 10th of November, next, for the purpose of adopting measures for building a bridge, across the River Moira, opposite the residence of the late William Wallbridge. (This bridge was built over the river to connect Dundas street or Kingston Road, east and west). How far such an undertaking will meet approbation generally, we are unable to say, as various opinions are afloat on the subject. One party is in favor of the bridge, where the present ; represented which is tottering on the banks of the river; another party thinks a bridge should cross the river above, in order to intersect Pinnacle street; while a third, are loud in support of the present site; indeed many Gentlemen are desirous of having three bridges, one at each of the places alluded to. Among ists us "There is nothing like leather." Odd the truth be ascertained, we are of the opinion that at present it could be found, for having one opposite every lot on Front street,—where a man's treasure is there will be his heart also.

"I is high time to build a new bridge or repair (if practicable) the old one. As is now stands, it is absolutely dangerous crossing, especially with loads. We would here suggest the idea to persons who are in the habit of bringing loads in Belleville, to examine the bridge before attempting to cross it, as we anticipate hearing, every day, some dreadful accident befalling it, ernment. I would not give them a five-cent piece."

Upwar followed the Premier's completion of his declaration, with exclamations shouted so rapidly from Conservative benches that they could not be heard. Premier King took a drink of water and then added the remark: "My Tory friends do not like it."

Proper Constitutional Sphere

Consulting, he said he believed in technical education and trans-Canada highways just as much as any of the strongest advocates of these matters. But their promotion should be kept in tehir proper constitutional sphere. The Premier read extensively from his own writings on Labor matters to show that long before he entered politics he had publicly favored unemployment insurance and certain lines of social legislation. He believed in it today, and believed it was certain to come about in Canada, eventually. If the Provinces desired to co-operate with the Federal Government in the matter of a scheme of unemployment insurance, he invited two or three or four of them to make their desires known, and the Federal Government would respond.

Tory Provinces Need not Apply

as a whole to spend in their Provinces and save themselves raising taxes for their own purposes. So far as giving money from this Federal Treasury to Provincial Governments is concerned, I would be prepared to go a certain length, possibly, in meeting any of the two Western Provinces that have Progressive Premiers at the heads of their Governments, but I would not give a single cent to any Tory Government in Ontario.

Ontario's Hope

Hon. Hugh Guthrie—was there ever a more glaring piece of impropriety on the part of a Prime Ministerr? It is a threat or a bluff against five of the great Provinces of Canada, or an inducement or a bribe to four of them; and that from the lips of the Prime Minister of Canada. Surely that is a vicious principle. Surely that is an exposure of the narrow, partisan mind of the Prime Minister himself. Language of that kind may be worthy of a Tammany leader in the wards of New York, where you say: "Give me the whole ticket or you get no money" but it is unworthy of the Prime Minister of Canada. I hope, for the dignity of the House and the good name of this Parliament, the Prime Minister will rise in his place and withdraw his improper remarks.

World Problems

Premier King declared his view that once unemployment was admitted to be more than a municipal or Provincial problem it became immediately more than a national problem; it was actually a world problem. His first interruption was James S. Woodsworth (Labor, Winnipeg, North Centre) drew from the Premier the plea that he be allowed to finish with as few interruptions as possible. He declared that by actual count, Hon. Peter Heenan had been interrupted 146 times in his speech on the unemployment assignment.

"There has always been winter unemployment in Canada, Premier King said, and there always would be, and it is that unemployment condition became an emergent one it remained a municipal or Provincial problem.

"And when conditions became such that the Province—I do not say all the Provinces, but two or more—find they are unable to cope with the situation in their Province," he proceeded, "then I say it is the duty of those Provinces to make representations to the Federal Government, and the Federal Government to take these representations into consideration. But I do submit, in the absence of any representations for the Provinces what ever, we have no right to say there is any national unemployment."

Dealing certain with the nine Provinces, Premier King declared that not one of them had requested Federal assistance in meeting its unemployment problem, and, indeed, the Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec had categorically specifically stating that no Federal assistance was wanted.

There had been periods of prosperity, he said, from various Provincial heads.

"What is giving money from this Federal Treasury to Provincial Governments, as some of you I would be prepared to go a certain length, possibly, in meeting any of the two Western Provinces that have Progressive Premiers at the head of their Governments, but I would not give a single sent to any Tory Government on social problem.

Mr. Bennett and Conservatives — Shame, shame. And you the Prime Minister.

Not a Party Question

Premier King—What is there to be ashamed of? My honorable friend is getting very indignant. I do not know what has got under his skin.

With respect to giving money out of the Federal Treasury to any Tory Government for unemployment purposes, these Governments with policies diametrically opposed to those of the Gov-

MME. ALBANI IS DEAD AGED 77 YEARS

LONDON, April 4.—Madame Albani famous singer, died Thursday. She had been in retirement for almost two decades, and her greatest triumphs were won in the last century. In private life she was Madame Gye.

Madame Albani made several tours in Canada, her native land, after she became famous, the last one being in 1906 ,when she sang in Montreal, Toronto and through the West.

Madame Albani, who ranked as one of the great soprani of the last century, was born on November 1, 1852, in the little village of Chambly, a few miles from Montreal, the daughter of the organist of the local church. Joseph Lajeunesse. Before it was discovered that little Marie Emmu, as she was christened, had a phenomenal voice, she became a good player of the piano, organ and harp, under the tuition of her father.

THE OLD AND THE PRESENT DOCTOR

A Toronto paper asks, "Is the good old-fashioned family doctor a thing of the past?" Many people have complained that the type of medical man whom they knew in the long ago has disappeared before the specialist. The paper says that the members of men who had a substantial knowledge of all the ills of the body as a whole are fast disappearing before the man or woman trained to specialization. "If this passion for specialism," comments the editor, "ever reaches its logical conclusion, then the public will have to become its own diagnostician. The afflicted will have to locate the site of their own ailments instead of asking the doctor. The paper goes on to cite a case of a boy who fell out of a tree, gashed his arm and had it stitched by a doctor only to find later that the arm had been fractured. Another incident was that of a man struck by a truck who suffered a gash on the head which was stitched and after a while it was found that the man's leg was broken.

Speaking a word for the return of the general practitioner of the past the editor remarks that there is a reasonable opening for his return. He remarks that the public maintain that a doctor is not compelled to do any more than he is asked to do, though one might be expected to suspect hidden injury in the above cases cited.

Yet in Ontario it does appear that there is quite a large proportion of medical men who have sufficient general knowledge of human ills and the human frame to permit them to diagnose instead of leaving that to the sick or injured man. Belleville, for instance, has men who rank high in the specialist class as well as numbers of men of broad experience and knowledge in human ills.

C.N.R. TRAIN'S TRIAL RUN

The Canadian National six hour trial train which passed through this city yesterday afternoon on its trip from Montreal to Toronto means a great deal to the business world. The railways of today are among the most progressive of institutions and lead the way in many things.

The eyes of the Canadian world and much of the United States are watching anything which will cut down time on the roads. The C.N.R. is alert to the needs of the age.

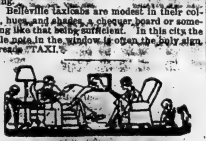
The run of the train had more than ordinary interest for Belleville in that so large a population of this city is directly interested in the success of everything associated with the Canadian National Railways.

CULTURE NEEDED TO APPRECIATE LEISURE

A strong plea for broader culture among the youth of today was made by Myron C. Taylor addressing Cornell Alumni. He stated that education must extend its facilities and that the added leisure which machines have made possible demands a refined mind.

His words were. "The cultural side of man must in this new cycle be given prominent attention, that in his hours of freedom from the practical affairs of life he may have a forum in which to indulge his mind and soul in ways uplifting and exalting." He said that whatever was to come after, there was a century at least in which this earthly life at its best and on its highest level will be lived. The reaction of the public and the individual to the demand of this age will be the measure of success with which the opportunity is met. He favored the study of the arts for the sake of refinement and culture for those who are inclined towards the idealistic. "The love of beautiful things, the satisfaction that follows upon indulgence in refined and soulful pursuits, afford a more enduring satisfaction than do any other diversions," he said. "Love of beauty, an uplifting mind as to higher spiritual things, is evidenced as a growing force in the community by the eagerness with which the public may now be found in great numbers visiting the galleries, the museums, the public libraries and the great halls where the highest class of symphonic music is performed. And as we see the long line of exhibitions and entertainments, where part in any form prevails, there is an endless line waiting to enjoy its soul-satisfying qualities.

"To prepare for this new cycle, which our youth and our growing leisure open to us, it is the duty of all institutions of learning so to expand their facilities that they may offer in the best possible form to all who attend upon the vocational courses a general knowledge of the arts and sciences, thereby awakening in the youthful mind a definite interest which will provide a key to open the door to the world that illimitable treasure house wherein lie life's greatest treasures.



"If education is to accomplish anything it must build character, inculcate and strengthen sound ideas through a true power of analysis, and an ability thoroughly to examine facts, should each man greater self-respect. It should impose and exalt man's humanity to man. These and other influences which follow from it should help to maintain the stability of the community and preserve and defend it against false prophets and extremists who from time to time appear in our midst."

It would seem that the world is on the verge of an age in which things of beauty will hold their due place, beauty not only of form but of sound and color and in all the details and affairs of life. There are traces of the trend shown in every part of the country.

DIFFERENCES IN TAXI COLOR SCHEMES

The taxicab color scheme in New York City is believed to have at last reached stability with the addition of bright blue and a green. The spectrum of the taxicabs there today is black, yellow, brown, cream, green, light blue. The colors changes in Manhattan have been startling in their rapidity. One commentator says that out of every dollar revenue eighty-five cents has gone hitherto for paint every other week and fifteen cents for gas, oil and chauffeur's living.

Belleville taxicabs are modest in their colors, buns and shades, a cheque board or something like that being sufficient. In this city the little note in the window is often the only sign. It reads "TAXI."

BLUE

When God roofed all the world with blue,
He chose the fairest color made,
And in that tender, melting hue
His love betrayed.

For, bathed in blue of sky or sea,
Or morning, or of midnight hour,
Most surely man's tranquility
And gladness flower.

There is a magic in the tint
That deep in darkling sapphire wakes,
And in the pale, colder glint
Of turquoise lakes.

But loveliest of all things blue,
Blue seas that sing, blue hills that rise,
Most wonderful, serene and true,
Are your dear eyes!

BELLEVILLE IS PROMISED pure filtered drinking water, and although the question does not originate this year still the City Council of 1930 can arrogate to themselves the distinction of being the Pure Water Council of Belleville. Alderman Wotten, Chairman of Water Works for several years, can look backupon his public career with a great satisfaction in these later years when he views the fine filtration plant which his foresight and wisdom helped materially to create, and as he drinks the pure sparkling water of Quinte Bay he will have the satisfaction of realizing that he has contributed something really worth while to the community life of Belleville.

SOUTH FRONT STREET and Dundas Street business men suffered much loss of business last year through the closing of Dundas street during paving operations throughout the whole of the tourist season. Now it is proposed to build the new bridge during the tourist season of 1930 and the same business men are fearful of another smash in the face in a business sense. Representations will be made to the Chamber of Commerce and City Council asking that the work be halted until early fall.

FROM CANTON, CHINA, comes a letter to this corner dated February 18, showing that the illuminating range of Sidelights is world-wide and not confined as some might suppose to Belleville, Corbyville, and Point Anne, not to forget Foxboro and Shannonville where the World's Fair is held. Our friend, T. Jackman, former resident of Belleville, but recalled by the Nationalist Government of China for consultation on modern reforms, writes that he arrived at Hong Kong last October, was very glad to see his family but few months has been making a strong effort to suppress the rebels including the so-called "Christian General." He hopes that things will be settled in the near future. Hands across the sea, and best wishes to the Nationalist Government, and our Nationalist friend, Mr. T. Jackman.

AN EDITORIAL IN A BOSTON NEWSPAPER PUBLISHED 61 YEARS AGO

A MAN ABOUT forty-six years of age, giving the name of Joshua Coppersmith, has been arrested in New York for attempting to extort funds from ignorant and superstitious people by exhibiting a device which he says will convey the human voice any distance over metallic wires so that it will be heard by the listener at the other end. He calls the instrument a "telephon" which is obviously intended to imitate the word "telegraph" and win the confidence of those who know nothing of the latter instrument without understanding the principles on which it is based. Well-informed people know that it is impossible to transmit the human voice over wires as may be done with dots and dashes and signals of the Morse Code, and that, were it possible to do so, the thing would be of no practical value. The authorities who apprehended this criminal are to be congratulated, and it is to be hoped that his punishment will be prompt and fitting that it may serve as an example to other conscienceless schemers who enrich themselves at the expense of their fellow creatures.

Press Comments on Amalgamation

Among the references to the amalgamation of the two dailies in Belleville into The Ontario Intelligencer which are much appreciated are the comments of the press in various parts of the province. Among these are the following:

BELLEVILLE'S NEWSPAPER MERGER

What has happened in other Ontario communities which have developed two paper towns and cities will probably take place in Belleville, now that the venerable Intelligencer and its rival "The Daily Ontario, have finally agreed to join forces.

Wherever newspaper amalgamations have taken place throughout the province and Belleville was practically the last to do so, the result was that attempts to support two daily newspapers, it has been found that the new combination has been able to render a much greater service to the community than either of the two publications merged. It has been placed in a position in which it may acquire new equipment and thus produce a better newspaper and it has not been obliged to face cut-throat competition which is circumscribed and, limiting its revenues, its usefulness, and its opportunity for service.

Knowing as we do those who will have charge of the direction of Belleville's new newspaper, in merger of the two existing publications, we are confident that it will more nearly approximate that city's needs than either of its predecessors and that it will in due course become one of the leading dailies newspapers of its importance. The merger brings Belleville into harmony with all the large communities of Ontario and rectifies a situation that, with greatly increased costs of operation, was a danger certain with any prospect of success. — Brockville Recorder and Times.

PAPERS AMALGAMATE

The Belleville dailies announced on Monday, that beginning April 1, the two papers would become one under the name of The Ontario Intelligencer. Both papers have been in long term of excellent service to their city and district in the past and with them there is something touching about their amalgamation, yet we cannot think what the change is for the sick the better. The publisher, Mr. Meagan, is a fellow townsman and a friend and his staff, The Post extends a welcome and best o' luck.—Deseronto Post.

THE ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER

Following the trend of times and having to be incurable demands of economic necessity, the two daily papers of Belleville effective April 1st, will be published as one paper under the name of The Ontario Intelligencer." With this amalgamation the Daily Ontario paper "Dies" disappears in Ontario.

The Ontario was first issued as a daily just sixty years ago, on March 20th, 1870.

The Intelligencer was first issued as a daily on May 1, 1897, by Sir (then Mr.) Mackenzie Bowell, later Premier of Canada and as member of the Senate.

The associations of the two papers at Belleville go beyond that. The Intelligencer was founded as a weekly in the year 1834, while the weekly section of The Ontario was the publication known as The Chronicle. Its history dates as far back as The Weekly Intelligencer. Both weeklies were merged with the dailies at the time of their age. Both the daily papers have been in close touch with the development of the city and the county for many years. They have had the loyal support of the people of Belleville and Quinte section in their efforts to publish a newspaper that would serve, by presenting the news of the day and by comment on the events local and foreign, of interest to the community served by them.

The amalgamation of the two Belleville papers should be of considerable value to that city. The new paper will be able to give a better news service and with the support of the entire community behind it to give to the people of Belleville and district a much superior newspaper in every way.

The disappearance of The Belleville dailies has been a long and prolonged forcehy to mind the changes that have taken place in the newspaper business in Ontario in the last twenty years. In what are sometimes misleadingly referred to as the "good old days", every small Ontario city boasted two newspapers. One supported the Conservative party and one the Liberal party. Each was run in the interests of the word political organs, and in many cases were controlled by politicians. Great battles were fought in the editorial columns and the opinions expressed had much to do with winning or losing elections. It may be that more was done than to educate the youth of our land in political matters when the newspapers were very active politically, but it is doubtful if the interests of the country as a whole were better served than by the present day "independent, mostly first" newspapers.

Twenty years ago there were two papers in Chatham, St. Thomas, Barrie, Stratford, Guelph, Brantford, Peterborough, Kingston, Brockville and St. Catharines, and three papers in Ottawa and Hamilton. Today in the smaller cities are served by one paper and thousands of people just as well served by two first-class papers as they were by the two. The single paper business was completely changed when the war ended and newsprint increased in cost. Publishing, it was the case of the survival of the fittest. Organizations and associations were brought about with amazing suddenness and publishing a newspaper became primarily a business instead of a literary pursuit. The development of The Canadian Press, with its representatives in all parts of the world, more attention was paid to news, and the service improved immeasurably, until today, the smallest daily paper can have its own leased wire, with cables coming into its office from the uttermost parts of the earth. The day of the political organ has passed, and with its passing news paper publishing has become primarily a community service. We, with

The Ontario Intelligencer every success in its new role, confident that under the guidance of W. H. Morton, it will be a powerful factor in the continued development of our sister city to the west.—Kingston Whig-Standard, April 1st, 1930.

THE LAST AMALGAMATION

Yesterday the city of Belleville joined the ranks of the cities of Ontario which have but one newspaper, the two Belleville papers which have now amalgamated were the last to survive the general wave of mergers which has swept over both Canada and the United States in recent years. Both are papers of long and honorable history, the Belleville Intelligencer having been established in 1834 and the Ontario in 1870, and during their years they have served their community ably and well.

It is interesting to note that while there have been many newspaper amalgamations, changing hands, newspaper cities into communities served by one paper, there has been a single case of reversion to a two-paper city, which is certain evidence that the public has been well served, and well-satisfied by having one strong paper rather than two, each sometimes indifferent merits. The amalgamation should mean a newspaper of publication of bigger and better news, and editorial service, and a still more comprehensive way the needs of their community. The circumstances of this is beyond question, and the results have been more satisfactory to the town, publishers and otherwise. This is instanced by the fact that since the amalgamation Toronto The Oshawa Times received letters from both papers from commending the newspaper on the fair and satisfactory manner in which it has handled election news and election issues.

Under the guidance of W. H. Morton, publisher of The Ontario, and new publisher of the amalgamated newspaper, The Ontario Intelligencer, the new paper should give the city of Belleville a daily newspaper which will rank among the best of the small city dailies of the province, and The Times extends to this and to its staff hearty congratulations on the former step, and its best wishes for the success of the new venture.—Oshawa Daily Times, April 2.

LIQUOR BANNING BILL ADVANCED

Second Reading Given By Senate After Amendment Is Lost

Ottawa, April 4. — The Prime Minister's bill prohibiting the export of liquor from Canada to the United States received second reading in the senate today and is to be read for a third time on May 7, following the Easter recess of parliament. The amendment moved by Senator W. B. Willoughby, Conservative from Ontario, the bill to a special committee of the Upper House was declared lost on division on the second reading and it went without a recorded vote.

For the two days members of the Opposition had argued the measure should go to a committee where expert evidence could be summoned to give evidence concerning the economic and financial international conditions and relations affected by the bill. The debate ended when the Senate last night and the Conservative leader announced he would not press his amendment to a vote if the government leader would undertake to have the bill read a third reading until after the Easter recess. Such procedure would provide several absent members of the privilege of expressing their views on the measure.

Half a dozen leading Conservatives, including Senator Willoughby, Sir George Foster, Edward Michener and Baldwin Robertson, announced they would vote for the third reading and the bill was then passed without a division.

In the senate there was considerable anxiety concerning the fate of the bill. If the measure passed third reading before the middle of May it may be in effect before the end of that month.

HE SIGNED ONLY BLANK PAPERS

W. E. N. Sinclair's Charges are Being Investigated by Special Committee

Toronto, April 3.—Evidence that he had signed only blank pieces of paper and not a statement in the effect that he had been paid with public funds for working on private farm of inspector of department of northern development, was given before public accounts committee of the legislature here today by Albert A. Kydd, of Nellie Lake, Ont. The committee is investigating charges made by W. E. N. Sinclair, K.C., Liberal leader, of misdirection of public funds based largely on a statement bearing the signatures of Kydd and James McAdam. It declared the two men worked on the farm of Frank C. Richardson, Bronson Junction, in 1927, and were paid with public money. Richardson is a government inspector.

Kydd, the first witness called, denied the truth of the contents of the statement. He admitted the signature on aforesaid was his, but declared he had signed only a blank sheet of paper.

Investigation of charges made by W. E. N. Sinclair, K.C., Liberal leader, that two employees of the government worked on a private farm of the inspector of the department of northern development, and were paid with public money, was commenced yesterday by the public accounts committee of the legislature. Three witnesses from Northern Ontario, F. C. Richardson, Iroquois Junction, department official, and A. A. Kydd and James McAdam, two workmen, were present to give evidence.

HARD WORK TO FEED SHRINERS

Toronto, April 3.—Butcher, Baker and Candlestick Maker will have a busy load to carry next June in the procession of the 10,000 guests who will flock to Temple Park, the C. N. E. wheeled city here for the Shrine Imperial Council Convention.

Present indications point to a "full house" for Temple Park, which means that some 600 Pullmans will come to rest there and with compliment of visitor for the term of the Council meetings.

It has been estimated by the sleeping car men that each one of the 10,000 Shriners will require 3.0 tons of bed to feed and housem. For those poultry minded in their eating habits 600 chickens must be sacrificed. A half ton of fresh fish will scarce survive to satisfy those who prefer to eat on board the parked train For breakfast eggs will require 50 crates. Nearly 3,000 loaves of bread will be consumed, to say nothing of at least 900 gallons of milk. The figures are minimum' and based on the assumption that less than one third of the 10,000 will board their trains. The foregbearing in connection with the food supply must begin work in advances to cover the practically one coast to the other. The C. N. R. will feature distinctive Canadian food throughout.

WOMEN, LEADERS IN WORLD PEACE

Miss Agnes McPhail Pays Tribute to The British Women

Toronto, April 3 (CP)—Are women less afraid than men of being thought silly?

Miss Kathleen Courtney, outstanding peace worker of Great Britain, gave it as her opinion tonight that is the reason why women have been among the leaders in the peace movement, beginning with the Hague Conference, when they drew up resolutions promoting peace in the midst of the Great War.

She was speaking at the luncheon given in her honor by the Women's International League for peace a nd freedom, and the League of Nations Society.

The similarity between the resolutions drawn up at the women's international conference at The Hague and President Wilson's 14 points were noted by the speaker. She did not claim that the latter were copied in any way, but recalled that at a dinner where President Wilson was seated next to Jane Addams, head of the Women's International League, he showed a very soiled paper and asked her if he might have another copy of the resolutions, as his was very nearly worn out.

In thanking Miss Courtney, Miss Agnes MacPhail, M.P., paid tribute to the efforts of British women, agreeing with the speaker that, although the government reflected the opinion of the public, it was necessary that they first have an opinion.

FRENCHMAN CLAIMS THRONE OF MONACO

He has instructed his counsel, Paul Boncour, who for long brilliantly represented France at the League of Nations to establish before the French Government his legitimate rights to eventual succession to the reigning prince, Louis II.

DEPLORES PUBLICITY GIVEN FLYING HAZARD

Toronto, April 4.—Criticising newspaper articles which magnify the danger of flying, Captain Earl Hand, president of the Toronto Flying Club, declared yesterday that with a real airplane and a real pilot, one was not likely to get hurt. His statement was at the L'ons Club luncheon at the King Edward Hotel, dealt with comparative advances of commercial flying in the United States, England, Germany, Italy and Russia.

Although the United States had surpassed Canada, they were encountering with factories lying idle, he said. The present equipment for carrying passengers was not feasible from a financial standpoint. Prices would have to be lowered and he was ready to predict that passenger places carrying from forty to sixty persons would be the next development.

GLEN ALLEN READY

Canadian Steamship Line Rented Eben James at Trenton

Trenton, April 4. (Spec'al) — With the breaking up of the ice in the Bay of Quinte comes thought of the ship ping business which seems then to be in for a big boom this season, and the Bay of Quinte Transportation Company accordingly has announced the summer schedule for the steamer "Glen Allan" which ples between Trenton and Montreal, calling at practically all of the Bay of Quinte ports.

The "Glen Allan" will make its first trip this year on April 28th, leaving Picton, where the ship has been laid up all winter. A squad of men are already engaged in getting her and preparing the hull known freighter for the season's work. The Glen Allan calls at Trenton, Redmerston, Northport, Deseronto, Picton, Allison Bain, Brockville, Cornwall and one or two other ports on its way to Montreal. This ship is duplicating the service given by the steamer Alexandria, which for many years has been known to those who travelled the bay years ago.

Canned Goods

It is expected that a large quantity of canned goods will be shipped from Trenton this summer, as the Spring Valley Canning factory has a large stock on hand, waiting only the lake navigation to start before shipping. The Canada Steamship Lines have rented the Eben James dock and will use it as a base to ship canned goods to various other ports this summer, while the government dock here will be extensively repaired in preparation for a bumper season. An appropriation for $1,800.00 was made in the Dominion House recently for repairs to this dock, and although no work has been done yet, ready for the water, the work of construction will start as soon as possible.

At present the water at the Trenton government dock is only ten inches from the top, and in the opinion of others a shipping men, it will go higher yet. This year the water is much high er than it was at the same time last year.

These clinics are held every Thursday afternoon from two until four o'clock, and the Trenton Clinic has been carrying on four years. Nurse Haslam has been in charge for one year in May. Trenton, April 4. (Special) — Quick work by the Frankford fire department saved the J. A. Ferguson's house from destruction a few days ago. There was more damage done by water than by the flames.

CANADIENS WIN CHAMPIONSHIP OF HOCKEY REALM

Flying Frenchmen Defeat Boston and Capture Stanley Cup

Forum Montreal, April 4. — The dashing Montreal Canadiens brought the Stanley Cup and world's professional hockey honors back to Montreal last night by taking the second game of a two-out-of-three series from the Boston Bruins, last year's titleholders. Canadiens won last night 4 to 3. They had previously captured the first game 1 to 0.

Champions easily deserved the title. They outskated and outplayed Boston for the entire first two periods. The new cup holders then showed such stamina and defensive qualities to hold off a burning third period attempt by the visitors and maintain their slight margin to the close.

The luck began the game at a terrific speed, with which neither could not cope successfully. Play prevailed their checks and rounded the famed boston defense almost at will to blaze shot after shot to Percy Thompson. The pressure could not be denied and McCaffery and Wasnie each scored from passouts from behind the net. Lepine and Burke getting assists.

The second period again found the locals in the ascendancy, and they hammered in two more counters, with one by Boston sandwiched in between Sylvio Mantha scoring from within close in and Moreau netting Leduc's pass. Boston's score in this period was by Eddie Shore, who rounded the defensive zone and fed a high shot that Hainsworth thought would go over the net, but the goalkeeper was surprised when the puck was hooked out of the net.

One Goal Disallowed

In the third period Art Ross sent four more counters at the attack, and Canadiens, tiring fast, resorted to hurling the puck away at every opportunity. The crushing Boston attack got two goals and a third, which was ruled "no goal" by Referee Mallinson account of interference. Galbraith and Clapper did the scoring with Oliver and Wetland credited with assists.

It was the first Canadiens have played championship hockey since 1924, and the first time that the cup has been in Montreal since Montreal Wanderers took it from Victoria in the spring of 1926. It have not been the Canadiens showed a hard furrow, taking a two-game lead over Chicago Black Hawks and beating the New York Rangers two straight, and the games going to a safe all-time overtime record.

Boston managed to defeat Montreal Maroons three games to one in the gruelling first-place series and those matches took so much out of them that Canadiens, tired as they were, easily overplayed last league's record makers in the games at Boston and here.

Boston Penalized Costly

Jolin was through the first shot a long one that Thompson cleared easily. Two Boston rubs were bottled up in the corner and Canadiens had his own breboud. but Thompson was late out. Then Lepine broke down Boston defense to put Larochelle in on a beautiful passout, but Thompson son fell to smother the shot. Oliver made a long rush for the Boston bottom, but Joliat rushed back to clear. Canadiens were penalized three times minutes, Gainor taking his accustomed place on the wing.

Canadiens were holding Boston tight during the early stage of the game, Lepine and Wasnie each making good shots at the Boston net. The regulars were then given a rest, Joliat being out of the play with a hard body check from Shore, and Gainor also by for tripping. Oliver followed for Canadiens and Galbraith and Clancy lens were two men up. Moreau was benched for high-sticking Barry.

Canadiens continued to get close in but his pass to Lepine was intercepted by Barry, and Wasnie, after a fine run, Thompson saved, but McCaffery hammered in the rebound.

The teams were five to four in Canadiens favor when Shore scored his three men into Canadiens' end, but Hainsworth was in the way. Boston Owen was good, but was "rained" when he appeared with a new headgear. He subbed for Galbraith at once.

Morenz took his second penalty and Canadiens barely managed to keep Weiland's rushes. Shore's lone effort failed to bother Hainsworth and Lepine watched him. Hilchman tripped Morenz and Joliat rushed down and the Wasnie were covered when close in. Wasnie quickly passed to Morenz, passout to beat Thompson from ten feet out. Hitchman was still off. The flying Frenchmen were going at their own or any one else's best and Boston could not hold them.

Owen, Mackay and "Doc" Carson were Canadiens' choice for second period. Canadiens were pressing from the whistle, and by a pretty play Mackay for infraction of the anti-clipping rule. Morenz, Joliat and S. Mantha sent in a pretty three-man passing rush, which was blocked by Hitchman. The Boston crowd was cane on. Hainsworth fell on and held Boston's first attempt which ended in the form of a sampling drive from Shore. Bruins were putting more sting into their attacks, but Canadiens were checking closely.

Morenz and McCaffery raced around the Boston defense, but Thompson saved. Few Boston rushes trickled through a Canadien defensive system and the last Canadiens were in their wards always got back in time to save the day. Lepine guard, which got by far out to the blue line.

Canadiens went into a three to nothing lead when Sylvio Mantha got his stick to Wemlin's rebound and poked in under Thompson, who was falling. Galbraith was penalized for holding and while he was off Canadiens figured in a dozen dashing rushes. The crowd was in holiday mood, cheering lustily every Canadien move, and going crazy when Morenz and Joliat robbed Shore in quick succession.

Cleveland, April 4—Trouncing the Buffalo Bisons 6 goals to 3 in the fourth game of the series, Cleveland Indians last night won the title in International Hockey League championship here, taking the final series three games to one. This is Cleveland's first year in professional hockey, and the Indians went wild when the hard-hitting Indians climaxed a brilliant showing throughout the league season to gain the title.

The Stadium was packed for the game which saw the Indians start heavy favorites when the title was first registering their third straight triumph. They gave a decisive demonstration of superiority, the fury of their opening offensive forcing the Bisons back to protect their cage.

Dorati Scores Early

A big break for the Indians occurred late in the second period after a session counting for 20 minutes, when Martin, Buffalo relief forward, crosschecked Stewart Duncan, and was given a major penalty. Coach Holmes immediately sent in his regular front line, and within a few seconds they had put the Indians in the lead. Dorati early did the trick by accepting Capt. Alex Gray's perfectly executed pass around the defence and snap the puck past Bill Taugher, opposing goalkeeper for the opening tally.

The first half of the game had period, like the opening session, was a bitterly-fought battle between two sets of fast scoring forwards. Play ranged from end to end at a terrific pace, but the rival rearguards refused to yield.

Doug Young, stellar young Cleveland defence star, clinched the game with two lightning-like thrusts. The first time he literally forced the puck over Bison who dared to step in his path. Onward he swept to the enemy goal-mouth to rap in the second counter of the game. Scarcely a minute elapsed when he rushed down again and eluded the entire opposition to hammer home Cleveland's third and last goal.

WHEAT SHOOTS UPWARD TODAY

May Wheat up 2½ to 3¼ Cents At Opening of the Exchange

(Canadian Press)

WINNIPEG, April 4.— Apparently definitely decided to start on the long awaited upward move, wheat prices continued their rise on grain exchange today. Advances of from two to more than three cents were recorded at the opening in all three futures. Continued good export business, unexpected European strength and more dry weather in United States winter wheat belt caused new rise. Advance at start ac-cording to delivery was five cents yesterday and more than two days before. Trading today in opening hour was quite active. May wheat was 2 1-2 to 2 3-4 cents higher at $1.17 1-2 to $1.18 1-8; July was up 2 to 2 3-8 at $1.19 1-2 to $1.21 and October was two to three cents higher at $1.22 to $1.22.

Music Inserted In Natural Way In Dowling Film

Comes to the Audience As Real Expression of Feeling of "The Rainbow Man"

Earlier talking pictures left an element of inconsistency in them as regard the interpolation of music and songs, but "The Rainbow Man" commencing at the Belle Theatre tomorrow matinee daily, is a fine example of how this has been overcome in talking pictures and how songs have been made a natural part of the plot and theme.

How this is done is shown by considering the spots in the play in which vocal and instrumental music have fitting places.

The song "Smile, Little Pal" is introduced in a vaudeville dressing room. Then there is the music of the minstrel men on parade. During the interchange of romance, "Lucky Day" and the girl, played by Marian Nixon, Dowling sings "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary."

In the minstrel show, Eddie Dowling, as "Rainbow Ryan" sings "Sleepy Valley" and "Rainbow Man." Other numbers featured prominently by the minstrel company are "Lucky Day" and "Let's Lift Up the Curtain" and "Tambourine, Tune Up."

There is a hurdy-gurdy in a New York street, a quartet in a Southern hotel dance, a Middle Little Pal" and the principal songs in the closing of the story in a theatre scene.

The songs, "Rainbow Man" "Sleepy Valley" and "Rainbow Man" were written by Eddie Dowling and James Hanley and were arranged in the complete musical score by Louis F. Gottschalk, the noted composer and conductor.

It is a Paramount all-talkie picture, featuring Eddie Dowling, Broadway's favorite son, and beautiful Marian Nixon. Many people in this section will remember from her recent appearance in the Belle July Cup Day Harrymore in "General Crack."

Paramount News, a superior Screen Vaudeville offering, Graham McNamee, famous radio announcer, newscastine (The Toronto Star Talking Newspaper) Dr. Frederick Perrow, harmony offering are announced for exhibition on the same program.

A street-Parade will be held Saturday at 1.15 p.m. extending from the Lower Fire Hall to the Belle Theatre.

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

When they whizzed down the long slide, Ardeth clinging breathlessly, with tightly shut eyes to Ken, they found Tom waiting at the end of the runway.

He turned on Ken, laughing but jealous. "You big bloke, ain't snitching a ride!"

There followed a scuffle in the snow, which became a free-for-all when Fred and Bill Lane were dragged into it.

More breathtaking rides—first with one then the other. Snowball fights when the men pelted the girls and were secretly amazed at the vigor of their defense.

Then a peaceful twilight hour, when dusk drove them back to the cabin to sit around the stove drying their wet feet.

Stamped forever on Ardeth's memory, this hour. She lay back in a low wicker chair, comfortably tired in body but alert in mind. Alive to the strange poise of it all. The last thick day-light straining through the turkey-red curtains at the window. Smell of pipe smoke and fresh lumber and wet wool drying. Laughing, effortless talk. The sprawling figures about her—a lazy grace in the slim bodies in the rough sport clothes.

And under everything—the thrilling consciousness of Ken.

That kind Ken, with that confident poise of head, he made Fred Eastwood look thick and clumsy. Ken's service-able, practical hands revealed and mocked hints made Bill Lane's elaborate sports outfit ridiculous.

All evening her love was a magnet, drawing her close to him. Trifling her shoes to dry, lest to be beside him, feeling that he was incognizant of the unease in her every itch of his body, though he kept on talking to Mary or teased Maida and Gwynneth.

The consciousness of him put a silver edge on her own laugh when she sat beside him at dinner. Her cheeks took on a sweet, warm flush. Her hands moved as she talked like fluttering birds, showing that even to them Ken's glance came stealthily around to her with a look which was a caress.

In that moment the room receded to Ardeth and the others became pale shadows. Only Ken and herself here . . . vitally alive, thrilling to the marvelous fact of each other.

She was here! She was filled with pride at once swaggering and humble. Only Ken and herself here, with this thrillingly sweet something playing like a cadence, "Ilka is, Ardeth!"

He had a glowing look for reply.

"All right—all yours!"

His words were blighting but there was a serious note in the man's voice. A regretful adoption of a supposed fine tone.

"You mean I can have everything?" She waved her hand at the rough store overgrown and stiff. Oh—over the evergreens. Took! that's too much—"

"Don't pretend to misunderstand me," he returned roughly. "You know my story about you, Ardeth!"

"Oh-oh-h-h!" She was suddenly in pain to keep him from actual words. Not a chance, have it? Not a chance yet.

She was suddenly and unreasonably angry. "Why do you say that—Yet!"

"Oh—because someday maybe there will be. Things don't always turn out the way one figures them . . . you don't look at me like that, Ardeth. What's all wrong with me? I say! You mustn't change your mind. Other girls have had their hopes."

She drew out of his arms and walked to the others.

What did she say herself, taking so calmly the proposal of marriage from a wealthy and presentable man? It also could have foreseen this in the grey days of the Harrison flat, how it would have thrilled her. She was to call some deep voice in her soul which forbidden her fate would regret this all of her life! Who was she to refuse such a marriage?

The crown of the evening was the walk back to the cabin after the dance.

Bundled in their coats they made their slow way down the snowy trail over the hard - packed snow. Their flashlights played back and forth like swarm of glowworms. There was no moon, but myriads of low bright stars hung over trees black and unstirring in the chill, cold air. Low and then they passed little cabins, the windows rectangles of warm light.

Ken, who had manoeuvered to walk with Ardeth lagged behind the others and when they had disappeared into the cabin he drew the girl into his arms.

Mary Eastwood's agitated figure suddenly appearing above them on the porch so that they drew apart in confusion.

"Ken—come in at once! A telegram came for you. Do you suppose . . . your mother . . .

VAST MERGERS IN OLD ENGLAND ARE IN FASHION

Big Combines Following Efforts of Thomas To Increase Efficiency

IDLENESS DOWN

Coal, Shipbuilding and Cotton Industries Have Fallen in Line

London, April 2. (CP)—Coal, shipbuilding and cotton interests have already effected mergers of vast proportions, and the shipping industry appears to be the next. The combines are not such concrete, blotting out organizations similar to the vertical trust have sprung up in Europe since the war. But the new idea has been applied in the mind of the most conservative of English business men. And, in every case where amalgamation of industries in the same general category has been effected, be the bond ever so slight, satisfactory results have followed.

Sir Thos. J. H. Thomas, lord privy seal and minister of employment, may not have actually set the ball rolling but he certainly gave it a strong push in the course of his efforts to lighten the burden of unemployment he direct of his energies to increasing the efficiency of business and stimulating greater development of trade for the products of British industry. He induced British banks to give greater assistance to industry than they have ever before been willing to render.

Perhaps the outstanding example of this new movement, a movement of tremendous significance, is the "nine counties" coal scheme. The scheme in fact is the basis around which nearly most of the provisions of the government's coal mines bill, now before owners of five counties—Lancashire, Yorkshire, Northumberland, Derbyshire and Warwickshire—banded together to control production, thus maintaining areas and consequently establish, to some extent, the price they might realize for their products.

The plan worked satisfactorily almost from outset. It overcame many of the continued intense competition which other coal fields experienced, both among themselves and in the foreign and neutral markets and paved the way for the counties scheme watched their procedure. Around her mines their demand and saw their balance sheets reflect the move in a gratifying manner.

Shipbuilding interests were the next to take the hint. Most of the leading shipbuilding concerns of Barrow, Birkenhead, Belfast, the Clyde and the Northeast of England formed an impressive group and after considering and seeing more economic productions result. This body is accomplishing these ends by buying up obsolete and unprofitable shipyards, scrapping the plants and disposing of the sites with the proviso that they are not to be again used for shipbuilding. The industry has been consolidating its position for the past few years.

The great Lancashire cotton trade is the latest renowned in the amalgamation movement. Many months of work its behalf in the accomplishment that the British Cotton textile Association Ltd., to be formed through the Joint Committees of the Cotton trade Organization. It is an unique body in the history of the cotton trade, for it will be representative of all sections of the Lancashire industry, including the operatives.

It will not be itself a trading organization but it is hoped that it may be the means of creating a number of specific trading ventures and become the initiating and supervising body in various effort to extend overseas markets. Where opportunity is thought to exist for the trade of a body like this, subsidiary syndicates will be formed and will be conducted in the way, with the industry itself and without interfering with established channels of business, new economies of mass production may be achieved. These will start with the raw material and be carried through all stages to the actual distribution.

It appears likely that shipping will be the next great branch of British industry to get in line with the new movement. At any rate Lord Inchcape, who heads 40 or more shipping and associated companies, and Sir Alex Wilds Star, Royal Mail, Union Castle and Lamport and Holt lines, said recently he regarded all his ship ping companies as one. In the course of a few more years I hope to see them, as one company, of which Lloyd Britain need not be ashamed," he said.

Piles Go Quick-

Piles are caused by congestion of blood in the lower bowel. Only an internal body can remove the cause. That is why salves and outlets fail. FISH FROZEN IN RIVER PERISHED

Lack of Oxygen In Muskrat River and Mud Lake Is Cause

Pembroke, April 2.—Because fishermen of the district failed to realize that a dam which controlled the water in the whole fish population of Muskrat River and Mud Lake perished, it was revealed today when hundreds of dead fish were found floating.

It was so cold that the water froze to the bottom and the fish died for lack of oxygen.

During the previous really cold winter, entertainment reigned in the harvest. They chopped holes in the ice of Muskrat River and the lake, gasping for breath, rushed to the surface where they were caught about six by the barrelful.

The fish dwindled today sorrowfully when citizens realized the harvest they might have had, had they only realized that it had failed in 1930.

HOCKEYISTS PASS THROUGH CITY

Roy Brothers, Barrie, and manager of the London Canpro League hockey team and Mrs. Brothers, passed through the city today and stopped at the New Queen's Hotel. Mr. Brothers had signed players for the London team this winter, bringing the squad into the league after losing out in 1930.

Mr. Brothers said that he had hopes of marriage was fixed at 16, and women were given equal rights in education. The women of the delegation, sent to the international congress in Rome, left of their wills, on their return to Egypt no longer did they wear the light black mantle called the habara, which almost covered their heads and shoulders, or the boukra, a thin white veil of crepe covering the nose, but not the eyes. They forswore its mysterious charm for ever, and this denotation was welcomed without the least protest.

Egyptian women today are free. Liberated from the harem, the veil, they work, study, marry or not, as they prefer, and choose their husbands. They have taken part in all the great international movements of their sex. One woman alone, in their country, is still subjective to the ancient traditions. Her Majesty Queen Nazli, the beautiful and charming Queen of Egypt, lives secluded in winter in the splendor of her palace in Cairo and during the summer is hidden in the magnificence of another palace by the sea near Alexandria.

Then, the care of children, in case of separation of parents, must be regulated. The penalties given to the mother made more equitable. It will be difficult to refuse them, reforms much longer to women whose sweat

WOMEN OF EGYPT THROW OFF YOKE OF CENTURIES

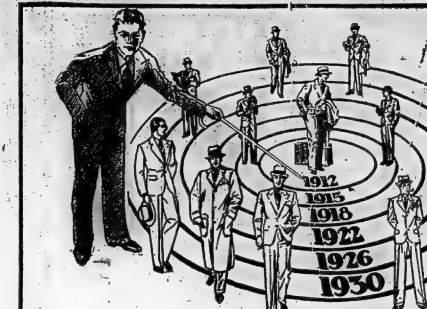
Little Daughters of The Pharoah's are now Emancipated

MODERNIZE SELVES

Period of Emancipation Began About Twenty Year Ago

Paris, France April 3—One of the most interesting of social movements is that of the evolution of Egyptian women, says Marc Helys in Le Figaro. They have modernized themselves with an extraordinary rapidity and in their feminism have given proof of remarkable sense of the necessary and intelligence. Women of the highest society gave the first example to the others. About 20 years ago they began to emancipate themselves, and their understanding of this movement was first of all to instruct themselves in the laws of property, and then to recast these. Then, too, the Egyptian University was hardly open, in 1908, before it saw women taking its courses.

At the same time they founded charitable societies, like the Mohammary-Mehemet-Ali, and cultural and social associations, such as "The New Woman." In this way they worked for some years so simply, without any frivolities, that no one could take umbrage at their activities. But when political events led them to reveal themselves it was discovered that they were a force, and an organized force.



I am reproducing now the impressions of an American woman who happened to be in Cairo in 1922, at the moment when, under a certain rules of courtesy, an ardent struggle was going on between the Egyptians and the British. That woman was much astonished to note the change which had occurred in the women's look and above all, the very important part which they took in Egyptian political life. Organized in the manner of militia, from princess to peasant (or fellah), they were the very heart and soul of the nationalistic movement.

In the absence of the exiled Saad Zagloul Pasha and other Egyptian political leaders, Madame Zaglool—Sofia Issem—ah, they called her—became the head of the resistance to the English invasion. Around her gathered important wives, sisters and the betrothed of men in exile.

These ladies organized public demonstrations. For the first time in Islamic one saw defiling in the streets processions of veiled women, marching in good order and preceded by automobiles with banners; they did not content themselves with these patriotic manifestos; they boycotted English merchandise which was prohibited. It was the first time in the history of the country a Mohammedan woman received a delegation of men—300 of them—and spoke to them. The lady of Madame Zaglool who knew how to speak, an extraordinary eloquence, with the respect for traditional custom. European women have taken its origin from the cloak which is the feminine epitaph of the Arabic (and international covering), a scarf of white gauze veiling her hair and throat, which, when adopted will be worn with such a charming eloquence that all the men were inspired to write to tears.

Women then took up the education and help of those who had to earn their own living—Twenty years before that Musulman would not have shy at the idea. They bought a woman his faith who could do this? But the inspiration was given by the Nationalist and Feminist movement in Egypt had realized that there are no rights not accompanied by duties.

In 1924 women obtained these two advantages: to the laws the legal age of marriage was fixed at 16, and women were given equal rights in education. The women of the delegation, sent to the international congress in Rome, left of their veils, on their return to Egypt no longer did they wear the light black mantle called the habara,

MAKE FIGHT ON BEHALF SETTLER

Ottawa.—A vigorous fight on behalf of the settler, farmer and even business opinion depends on the wood cut from their own freehold land for their livelihood, is expected under discussion in Parliamentary circles here, as a preliminary resolution sponsored by Georges Parent, M. P. for Quebec West, aims to prevent the export of wood cut from private lands. Those who favor this resolution suggest that in this manner it is possible to check the supply of raw material from United States newsprint mills and have them close down which is benefiting the demand for newsprint from Canadian mills and possibly a reduction in the price of paper recently attempted without avail.

Opponents of the resolution in the House of Commons are considering the matter from the standpoint of their constituents whose very living depends on the sale of their wood. They believe that no matter what influence the export duty may have on the newsprint industry the settler and farmer are sure to suffer in that the market for their wood will be restricted, a condition which invariably results in a price slump.

Moreover, members of the House of Commons from the ridings where would be affected point to the fact that the wood cut from farm lands which comprise 23 per cent. of the total timber area in Canada, is already scarce timber and that only wood from the remaining 15 percent. can be exported and it is private property. It is believed the cutting off of this supply will affect United States mills very little because other sources of supply, such as Russia, Sweden, the Southern States and Alaska are available. Russia is a keen competitor in this field, having sent some pulpwood to the United States last year and is on the alert for just such an opportunity as would result from embargo to force themselves further into the market.

All these influences are being cited in opposing the embargo proposition and those in close touch with the situation argue that it is folly at the present time for Canada to risk the loss of an export business worth $20,000,000 annually and to endanger the means of livelihood of the 50,000 Canadians who are engaged in the pulpwood business on their own private lands.

LIQUOR BAN BILL REACHES SENATE

OTTAWA, April 3.—When second reading of the bill to ban liquor exports to the United States was moved in the Senate Tuesday by Senator Raoul Dandurand, the Government leader, unofficially refused to accept an amendment moved by Senator W. B. Willoughby, the Conservative Leader, to refer the measure to a special committee of the Senate. The Opposition Leader wanted second reading of the bill postponed for the purpose of first obtaining by a specific committee information as to the effect the passage of the bill would have on the economic, national an dinternational bond ing and relations of the States.

"I refuse to be dragged into a committee where we would have the liquor interests sitting around the table and where the low moan trade they stand to lose," said Senator Dandurand. "The special committee would be absolutely useless, and I am not interested in what they are making or gaining by this smuggling business. We have already been faced with this matter and if they cannot give us any information we do not already possess we cannot be furnished in the Senate Chamber."

FRENCH FAIRS AID FARMERS TO GET HELP

Hiring Days Pleasant and Convenient Means of Obtaining Labor

BATTLEFIELDS

Farmers Vie With One Another to Try and Get Help

Paris, France, Apr" 3.—(By Joseph Le Hachmeier, Canadian Press Staff Correspondent).— Hiring fairs have become in France this spring veritable fields of battle.

At the appearance of a man with a switch in his hat, the tumult mills around him. No sooner does a maiden appear with a flower at her breast than she is declared the sume queen of the tournament. For the switch in the hat-band and the flower in the maid's corsage are traditional signs that the wearer is ready to hire for a year on the farm.

Time was, when master farmer came down to market towns in March or April to hire their help, they could pick & choose among the bucom country girls standing besides their shining brass milk jugs and sweet smelling butter. The farmer could draw a long face and put stiff conditions on the farm hand. In those days, men were paid 600 francs (412)0 a year, food, lodging and washing, the girls, 250 to 400 francs (170 to 240).

But that was 27 years ago. And the franc was worth five times what it is worth today.

The girl who now stands beside her shining milk jugs in the market waves on hiring day enjoys the pleasing spectacle of seeing patrons vie for her services, waving 10 francs notes before her, undismayed gaze, the victor paying her a tidy sum in advance.

Wages for a maid servant capable of directing a farm house are now 2,500 to 3,000 francs for the year, and an advance of 5 0 francs on what was paid last year. A man who has charge of the cattle, a strong farm hand who has completed his military service, is paid 5,500 to 6,000 francs a year, that is approximately $150 a year for the maid and $250 for the man.

Much wages have advanced less than the cost of living, but more than 4 year. They are crowded with food and luxuries. As a pledge of amicable relations, each servant is given a pair of respectable sabots to seal the bargain. This year, the sabots of the maid bore touches of equestrian decoration.

National economists claim that France is dying for farms, lack of workers, lack of cultivators. Cries of alarm are heard in the Parliament. Diagnosis statistics are cited. France's richest nations—so the critics assert —are being fast depopulated. Farming cantons of Calvados, the garden of Normandy, have little more than half the number on the farms this year compared with a century ago. Meillerie, dream village on Lake Leman, refuge of Jean Rousseau, had, before the war, 1,300 souls. Now there are about 706. The same is raised from the lower Pyrenees.

Only Dumas, birth-place of Dumas D'Artagnan, and the Basque country, have resisted the call of the city and lost none of their numbers.

As the native cultivator retreats the stranger takes his place. In the rich lands of the south, Italian farm laborers number nearly 800,00, Poles and others in the north number 400,-000.

But the shepherds and the shepherdesses, the cowherds and the reckoned maid-servants at the hiring fairs know little about statistics. They have a good substantial raise in pay. For them, "God's in his Heaven, all's well with the world."

The fair over, in the evening, they sing in chorus their gay country songs, then they go between hedgerows bright with poppies and daffodils to their new homes for the year — willing workers of the smiling earth.

A Home-tested Medicine—They that are acquainted with the sterling properties of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil in the treatment of many ailments would not be without it in the house. It is truly a household medicine and as it is effective in dealing with many ordinary complaints it is inexpensive. Every home should keep it at hand, as the call for it may come unexpectedly.

China in Every Package

A surprise in every Quick Quaker package marked "China inside." Pieces of attractively patterned genuine English chinaware. As pretty as you could buy. Beautifully colored. . . distinctively shaped and bordered.

Breakfast is an important factor in success, nutritionists warn. For, according to recent surveys, 70% of the day's entire work, in schools, homes, factories and offices, must be done in the 4 short morning hours.

For energy to conquer the morning, children and adults alike eat Quaker Oats, because of its nutritive qualities as well as its zestful, real oat flavor which no other oatmeal can imitate.

Quaker Oats are different . . . better . . . because Quaker selects only the plump, firm, full-flavored oats. Of all pre-cooking processes at the mill Quaker has found that roasting alone gives a zestful, nutlike taste.

Most important of all, the famous Quaker millinz process retains every valuable part of the oat—Nature's best balanced cereal. Quaker Oats contains 16% protein—the "growth element"; 65% carbohydrates — the "energy" food. Besides abundant body-building minerals and the important vitamins.

Your grocer has both the Regular and the Quick Quaker that cooks in 2½ minutes from the time the water boils. Please do not confuse Quick Quaker with ordinary quick oats. Large household packages at small 10c. ask. Never in bulk. All Quaker packages contain coupons with which you can get valuable premiums.

THE CHOICE OF A REAL HOME

When the choice of a dwelling is to be made, we may be reminded that it is the people who will live in it who will determine whether or not it is a real home. Accepting such a statement without discussion, we think it is also true that the type of dwelling will affect number or help in the making of a home.

Development of body and mind requires certain physical conditions. Proper development demands fresh air for water, light, exercise and protection. It is a matter of commonsense, then, to make these demands in the dwelling if the home is to give the children those surrounding favorable to healthy growth.

The mother in the world does not make fresh air and sunshine appear in a room without a window, any more than she can prepare a proper meal without some cooking facilities.

A baby may thrive for the first year or two in a flat or apartment. After that, he requires space to play in. He should have freedom and should not be restrained within narrow bounds. When there are children, the home should have a yard, or, at least, be near a park where the children may go regularly to play.

During the early years of life, it is much more important for the child that there be a place where he may play with other children than that the house have all the modern conveniences and completeness. For love we must have air.

If deprived of air for a few minutes, we cease to live. We require the oxygen in the air in order that body functions. In addition to providing oxygen, the air in which we live has a tremendous influence upon us. It is a matter of common experience that in what we think of as stuffy rooms atmosphere, we are dull and listless, whereas in the fresh air, we feel bright and active.

Generally speaking the children, should live in fresh, cool air. The best place to secure such air is out in the open. Children should spend a large part of their lives playing or sleeping out of doors. Indoors, we should keep the air of the home fresh by ventilation, using suitable doors and windows to keep the air cool and in gentle motion.

In choosing a home, bear in mind the need for playgrounds, and for windows to let in fresh air and sunshine.

Questions concerning health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

WHAT ARE REAL FUNDAMENTALS OF MODERN CITY

Views Expressed in "Public Works" As to Modern City

"Upon the physical environment of the dwellers in any community depended to a very large extent the health, morals, and economic efficiency of the individuals; and the prosperity of the community as a whole. The chief benefit of community life in, or greatest cities is that co-operative effort, utilizing the foresight and skill of the governmental authorities, can secure for each individual far greater environmental advantages than would be available by individual action. Progress in civilization consists largely in increasing the field of these advantages, offering more of them to a larger percentage of population. In fact, the extent of these physical environmental factors in a given city or country is commonly used as the best measure of its civilization. Below is given a number of some of the more important items that are instruments for bettering modern community life. Arrangement of subject matter is not made in accordance with any assumed relative importance of the several items.

Paving and Street Design—Roadways should be adequate in width, and the surface should be impervious, dustless and of the proper type to carry the traffic expected. Also streets, and sidewalks should be of ample width to carry safely all pedestrian traffic. Corners should have safe radii for turning. Streets should be provided with adequate name and direction signs, and the houses numbered. Maintenance of streets should be under the direction of an experienced street engineer.

Water Supply.—The source and qual ity of the water supply should be of a character approved by the state board of health. The quantity should be sufficient to supply peak demands, including the fire protection requirement ed by the Board of Fire Underwriters. Distribution of this water should be to all houses; the pressure should be adequate to reach the top floors of all buildings (except office buildings, which may be cared for otherwise). Mains should be of adequate capacity, resident in full charge of the system, and the purification plan, if there is one, should be under the personal direction of an operator licensed by the State Board of Health, and under the general supervision.

Sewerage.—Sewers should be provided to all homes—physically possible of access, all plaggy lots, particularly reach with sewers should be served with individual or group septic tanks of sewer systems. All sewage treatment should be provided as is necessary to produce an effluent harmless and unobjectionable to other communities. Storm drainage should be provided adequate to carry off all ordinary rainfalls, and subsurface drainage constructed where necessary to eliminate swamps and wet areas and prevent damp cellars.

Refuse Disposal.—There should be prompt, frequent and cleanly collection of garbage, and satisfactory disposal, preferably by incineration. The use of proper containers at homes, and of sanitary and odorless collection equipment by the municipality, are important. Ash, rubbish and ashes, also, these should be ample facilities for cleanly collection and proper disposal. Prompt and sanitary removal of trade wastes is important.

Street Cleaning.—Roadways and sidewalks should be cleaned in a sanitary manner, with modern equipment and sufficiently short intervals to keep them always clean, and the sweepings disposed of without offense to any one. Snow should be so handled as to minimize interference with wheel and pedestrian traffic.

Street Lighting.—Adequate lighting is necessary to insure safety of traffic and pedestrians on all streets. The design and character of the lighting units should harmonize with local conditions.

City Plan.—A continuous commission to prepare and keep up to date a plan, with provisions for growth, development of new areas, improvements, etc., zones of the city, under the direction of experts; enforcement of zoning and planning regulations without favoritism.

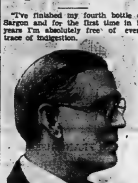
Traffic and Transportation.—Ample provisions for carrying citizens between their homes and the business and shopping districts quickly and easily. Facilities, such as railroads, railroads in the larger cities, docks, etc., to transfer and clear large tonnages of foodstuffs into the city. Proper routing of traffic to avoid congestion. Adequate and suitable traffic control. Provisions for parking, and for handling and unloading trucks without blocking traffic or endangering pedestrians.

Housing and Building.—The elimination of slums; proper building regulations to insure modern and healthful structure; the regulation of rooming and boarding houses and hotels; the regulation of the keeping and the maintenance of animals within the city limits.

Park and Recreation Facilities.—Ample park area, with facilities for recreation for adults and children, in the larger cities, a trained park and playground supervisor.

Airports.—An adequate airport, located within a reasonable distance of the city center, with hard-surface roads leading to it.

Schools.—Buildings to provide seating capacity and full-time schools for all children, well lighted and ventilated, fireproof, convenient and safe of access, with adjacent playgrounds. An adequate school nursing and health service.



Health.—Adequate regulations, backed by trained inspection service, governing the production and handling of milk, meat and food products, and the operation of restaurants and other food purveying establishments. Provisions for communicable disease control; mosquito and fly control; the prevention of nuisances; clinics, vital statistics and community hospital.

Smoke Control.—Restrictions as to the use of soft coal and educational and regulatory work in regard to the firing of furnaces and power plants to eliminate unnecessary smoke.

Fire Protection.—the provision of modern apparatus adequate properly to give maximum protection to all parts of the city; the housing of apparatus and firemen in appropriate structures. A complete and modern fire alarm system. The necessary laws and regulations, backed by efficient inspection, to reduce fire hazard.

Operation of These Facilities.—The efficient physical operation of these facilities is of little value without skilled and subordinate personnel to operate them. A trained, intelligent, interested and competent executive officer, city engineer, water works superintendent, superintendent of schools and of parks and recreation facilities, chiefs of fire and of police, all are of great value to from actual facilities. Selection of such sure maximum benefit to the people is essential. Mike Laughlin. A number of interesting views were shown themselves were served. The next meeting is to be held at the home of Mrs. L. A. Vanstiver, Barker street.

PICTON HARBOUR STILL ICE-BOUND

Consecon Fishermen Will Benefit by Dredging Operations

Ontario Intelligencer Correspondence)

PICTON, April 4. — Fishermen at North Bay, near Consecon, will benefit greatly by dredging that is to be done there this year. There is a large fishing colony there and in past years boats have suffered damage from the winds and open seas as there is no protected harbor. Dredging will provide a harbor.

In the House of Commons this week a Public Works item to grant $7,200 for dredging North Bay, was passed.

Senator H. H. Horsey and John Hubbs, M.P., were responsible for this improvement.

The House of Commons also granted $75,000 for the dredging of Telegraph Light Narrows and Point Anne. ICE STILL IN BAY

Ice is still in the harbor here and in this section of the Bay of Quinte. At the Adolphustown ferry at Glenora there is a large open spot and the ice is rapidly wearing away and it will not be long ere it goes out.

While playing with a hatchet Gordon Smith son of Mr. Walter Smith, who resides near Bayside Park on the Glenora Road, suffered a severe gash in his thumb which any required many stitches to close.

Misses Eleanor and Marian Cronk of Bloomfield, who are students at Bayside Ladies' College, Wellington, were first and second prizes respectively in the annual oratorical contest held there.

TROUT HAS THREE HEADS

A freak at the Provincial Fish Hatchery at Glenora is a young speckled trout that has three heads. It is a very lively little creature and promises to mature into a fine trout also.

Also unique are the white speckled trout at the hatchery, there being a number of them.

There have been several two-headed fish at the hatchery in the past but never any deformed ones.

Millions of fish eggs are now in the process of hatching and some of this will be sent to other hatcheries for propagation purposes and deposited in the waters of the Bay.

FLOCK DOUBLED BY LAMBS

Almost half the fresh of sheep are increasing fast. He recently purchased a few ewes and now has 30 lambs. In the lot were eight pair of twins, one triplet and one single. Mr. Duetia is a farmer residing at South Bay.

Many rivers, both large and small, find their way across the great horse-shoe shaped plateau which surrounds Hudson Bay. Following the course of some of these streams in a canoe, the outdoor man is sure to find excellent opportunities for fishing and hunting, besides experiencing the thrill of navigating unfamiliar waters and all the pleasures of camping out.

Another canoe trail, which in days gone by echoed chants of canoe-men and fur-trader, are now being followed by an increasing number of vacationists who are seeking a trip out of the ordinary run of holiday experiences. Physically and historically the region is one of great interest and whether one follows the Mattawin, Abitibi, Missinaibi Nelson or any other great rivers flowing into the Bay the cruise will be a memorable one.

The ever increasing demand for information concerning the attractions and accessibility of Canada's northland has resulted in the issuing by the Canadian Department of the Interior of a very interesting booklet entitled, "Canoe Routes to Hudson Bay", copies of which may be had free of charge upon application to the Natural Resources Intelligence Service, Department of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada.

The publication, which contains maps showing the various routes leading to Hudson Bay, giving a short description of each, will be found a most helpful guide to the sportsman and tourist in the selecting of an enjoyable trip by canoe.

THE WORRIES OF SIXTEEN
DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Recently I met a young man twenty-two years old, whom I like very much. I am just sixteen. I know he is going to ask me out and I hate to tell him. I know that he cares for me, as he already told me so. Please help me with this problem.

WORRIED

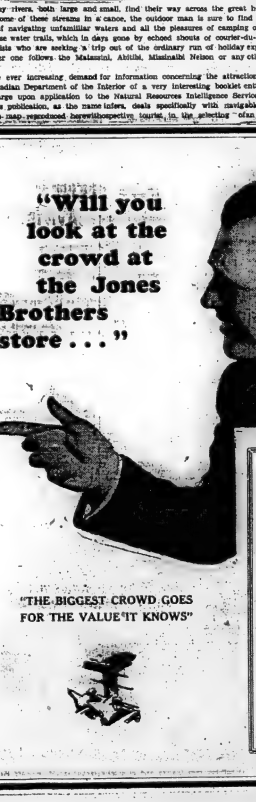
If you are afraid, my dear child, of losing your grown-up admirer in case he discovers how young you are, why can't you laughingly insist on keeping your age a secret—at least, until he knows you well enough to forgive you for this delightful fault of youth. It seems to me very unlikely, however, that he hasn't already guessed your age. I believe he likes you very much in spite of it, and that there's no need for you to delude yourself, and that you really have no problem at all.

SHE IS IN LOVE WITH BOTH
DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am in love with two real nice young men and both have asked me to marry them. The one I like best has done several things no good husband would do. He is true as far as women are concerned, but sometimes he does not write me for months at a time. And every time I've set the date for our marriage, he makes an excuse and gets out of it. The other man is quite different, and is now waiting for my answer as to whether I shall marry him or not. Which would make the better husband?

UNDECIDED

I don't believe you are very deeply in love with either of these young men or you would know which you prefer as far as the first is concerned, he seems to have settled the matter by putting off the wedding whenever you came the date. As you do not seem to know your own mind, why think of marriage at all at present?



HOW TO BE HAPPY
DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I want my husband through your advice to other girls. You see we are both very young. I am seventeen and he is only twenty. Please tell me how to keep him happy and content with me. My motto is: "Never use a cross word where you can use a kind one."

BRIDE OF THREE MONTHS.

Warmest congratulations I am delighted to have helped in bringing about such a happy union, and I believe you will continue to be kind to each other and have all the good times possible while you are both young.

SUCH expressions of surprise emanate from merchants who still believe that the world is busily engaged "beating paths in the woods" in search of better "mouse traps". That mouse-trap theory may have been right when it was first uttered, but better mouse trap builders of TODAY are telling the world about it in newspaper advertising columns.

Jones Brothers drew that crowd to their store by sending their message of "value giving" into the homes occupied by the various members of that crowd and not by waiting for the crowd to "beat a path to their door".

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

LONG DISTANCE

by

Charlotte Talley

Copyright, 1930, International Feature Service, Inc.

It was between two and three o'clock in the morning when the ringing of the telephone in the Graham Hamilton apartment wakened Harriet Graham from a sound sleep. Hastily she removed the receiver from the telephone at her bedside.

A man's foreign sounding voice asked, "Is this a long distance?" Mrs. Graham answered, "No, you have the wrong number," and hung up the receiver. She did not go to sleep again for some time.

For days and nights at intervals thereafter she heard that same foreign voice asking for the same question over the telephone. Why wasn't her husband home so she could ask him? It was so unfortunate.

In the hours of vigil following a chill in the night she pondered. Had she an enemy who wanted to separate her and break her rest? Was someone planning to break into the apartment? Or had she answered the telephone?

She appealed to the manager's office for telephone complaints, but she was told that they could do nothing about the matter. She was making an effort to solve the mystery when her husband returned from his business trip.

"What's the matter? You look worn out, Harriet." They were seated in the living room after an affectionate greeting.

She told him the story excitedly. "Why don't you ask the man for his number?"

"I did, twice. And the telephone company gave me the addresses of those numbers. One was a hardware shop and the other the address of a large foreign society on Clark.

"Why didn't you have the police investigate the matter?"

"I did that, too. A detective called at those two addresses but no one at either place knew who had called long distance from there recently. Now this detective, Sergeant Flynn, has an idea."

"Really?"

"Yes, today," he sarcastic. Since we have two months when this man calls again I'll be pretend that I'll long distance operator, and I'm to get the number and the address. I'm to tell him I'll get the number he wants and let him wait while I call Clark."

"I'll get you. Well I hope it works. That's a smart detective. He has the same idea I have, I guess. I think this boob's a nut who has a fixed idea that our number is just like it. It would be interesting to hear what he would say if he bought he had the wrong telephone number. He's probably trying to talk to his wife in heaven. Do you suppose he'll call up today?"

"Oh, won't he?" She had scarcely finished when the telephone bell began rang.

"Hello. Yes, this is long distance. What number do you want? The Mexican Consulate in Washington? Give me your number and the address of your phoning from. Cumberland Lane, the office of Romano and Romano at 36 Court St. All right. You stay where you can answer the phone and I'll call as soon as I can get your number. That's easy, though, Harriet.

Fred Graham went to the telephone and his face lighted up. "I took the receiver off the hook and talked to you, Mrs. Graham. Here is the answer. Dial 211, is the same combination as you would dial for your number, Dickens (Dic) 5311."

"Well, it'll be—blessed," declared Fred Graham.

It was Fred's voice over the telephone.....

"Well. I'll be—blessed," declared way. I told you they would. They can't turn reporters down on a good story like you tried to do. Wait till you see it!—I'll bring the paper home."

But Harriet couldn't wait. She hurried out to the corner and bought all the papers. On her return she hastily skimmed through them to see where did she discover her own handsome features. She located her picture. Sure. Yes, there it was near the top left of the page in her own favorite newspaper. And there was a drawing of a very spooky woman in bed, with eyes rolled up, one hand holding the telephone receiver, and the other clenched and raised on high heaven, while from her mouth the words, "Ye Gods!" in response to the words issuing from the telephone receiver, "Long distance?"

Harriet was as dignified and refined as she was handsome, so she was very angry. Those reporters! She would sue the paper! No, on second thought, she had better not; they might give more unpleasant publicity. Fred would laugh if she suggested such a thing. Better treat it as a joke when her friends marveled at the story and laughed at her plight. It took a good sense of humor to appreciate a joke on oneself. And those reporters had been clever; pretending they were calling from the telephone company and getting the facts directly from her after she had refused to give them the story.

END.

Correct Manners

Mrs. Cornelius Beekman

(By Mrs. Cornelius Beekman)

DEAR MRS. BEEKMAN:

I suppose you have answered this question in your column before. Does a married woman, when signing a letter, use her own first name in all cases or is it permissible to sometimes use her husband's initials or first name? I would appreciate your answer to this as we had an argument about it last evening.

NEW SUBSCRIBER.

Yes, I have answered this question many times before in my column, but, since it is a social hobby of mine to wish to urge married women to realize the correct signature form and to use it, I am delighted to repeat this answer. There is nothing that so quickly stamps a married woman as not knowing what's what as using the Mrs and her husband's name after. In other words, she does not, in the direct signature, use her first name, but her informal one.

For business letters, then and for all other letters in which the reader must be informed of her formal name this is the correct form of a married woman's signature:

Mary Smith Brown.

(Mrs. John Graham Brown)

If she wishes to omit the last name of her maiden name, it is correct for her to do so. She Mary Brown and, of course, it is permissible for her to omit entirely the name of her husband's name, if she wishes

To friends who know her formal name are signed with either the "Mary" or "Mary Smith Brown," depending on the degree or friendship.

Mrs. Beekman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

THE TROUBLE MAKE "3 JEALOUSY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen and have gone with one boy for two years. He says he loved me and I know I care a great deal for him. But I have been going with my cousin sometimes and I stopped going with him. He says he is sure he loves me and tries to make up, but I won't let him. Please tell me what to do.

BLUE EYES.

Isn't the trouble with you, dear Blue Eyes, that you are a little jealous? As long as he pays attention to you as if he still cares about you, why not let him drive cordially, as if nothing had happened.

IT WOULD BE QUITE PROPER

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Is it the correct thing for a brother to give his sister a hope chest as a graduation gift? Thanks for an answer.

LOUISE

A Hope Chest is usually given to an engaged girl for her linens and other treasures for her home, but if your brother is considered one of the family of the home, it teaches girls to be: Rise neighborwon —almost a lost art—and shows your appreciation things to have when the right man comes along.

Wild Geese Mating at Belleville Sanctuary

A visit to the Belleville Bird Sanctuary on College Hill at this time of the year is one of the most interesting and instructive trips a person can make, especially should the visit be made around feeding time. Mr. Walter Turner, who has charge of the sanctuary, showed a representative of The Ontario Intelligencer over the "Bird Home" last evening.

So far this year, flocks of Canada Wild Geese as large as thirty-five in number have visited the sanctuary on their way back to their breeding grounds in the north. They do not stay in the sanctuary at night, but in the daytime are common visitors, for they seem to know that at any time they can find a feed of grain awaiting them. There are eleven pinioned geese in the sanctuary, and their "Honk, Honk" to their fellows flying overhead doubtless persuades many to stop.

Geese Mated

Two pairs of the geese in the sanctuary have mated, and Mr. Turner expects them to hatch young ones this summer. If they do, these will be the first wild geese to be hatched in the Belleville sanctuary. So far this spring the wild ducks which are also located there have laid nine eggs, and Mr. Turner says he has a dozen eggs for breeding purposes by Sunday. These eggs will be set under hens and hatched by these fowl, as in this way the young offspring do not run the same hazards in the first few weeks of their life that they would were they left in the sanctuary.

One of each pair of ducks is pinioned, that is, has one

DRIVER IS HELD TO BE BLAMABLE

Loses Licence For Month and Is Given Suspended Sentence

Horton Hayden Trenton, involved in an accident on the Canifton Road, April 1st last week, was today fined in police court before Magistrate Mikel with wanton driving, during which bodily harm to Miss Mabel Baldrick, an occupant in the Buick car driven by Mr. Hayden, was caused. He was found guilty and ordered to pay the costs of the court amounting to $14.50 and had his driving licence cancelled for a period of one month and received a suspended sentence of one year R. D. Graham of Trenton, defended the young man and B. C. Donnan acted for the prosecution.

All the evidence tended to show that Hayden was driving his Whippet coupe at a fast rate of speed around the hairpin curve near the old Jeanie Page Mill on the Canifton Road and at the time was on the wrong side of the road. The car was so badly wrecked in the Burkett car twice as heavy as the Whippet car was turned completely round. The magistrate stated there was no doubt but the Hayden car was travelling at an excessive rate in fact he was flying from the Wheat. It is a serious thing to hold a man guilty of wanton driving simply because in driving fast but this accused admits that he was on the wrong side of the road. Mr. Graham in his defence in a wanton case, he said. "The court is dealing with a charge that is almost as grave as rape Mikel said "this will probably be a lesson".

HOUSING PROVES ACUTE PROBLEM RENTS MOVE UP

Many Citizens of Trenton Do Not Look Favorably on "Boom".

SINGLE ROOM USED

Trenton, April 5 (Special by Staff Reporter)—The housing problem in this town has become acute to the point practically an impossibility to rent a home. Only a month ago there were twenty to twenty-five homes in Trenton which could have been rented, but today families are living in single rooms, unable to secure any better accommodation Rents have gone up correspondingly, and houses which last fall could have been secured for from eighteen to twenty five dollars per month are now let, those sold for from thirty to forty.

This boom in the town, although beneficial just at present, is not looked on favourably by many of the citizens. Many families have come to Trenton with enough money to pay the first month or two rent, in the hope that work can be secured on the airport, but most of these have been doomed to disappointment, as there are not, at new plans, many employed there. Consequently, when their money runs out, the town will have to look after them or supply transportation back to where they came from. And this in itself will be quite an expensive proceeding.

Within the past week, over twenty-five families have moved from one house to another here, according to the meter man, who has to change the meters as the families move and others come in. Whether this will continue for another month is problematical, but it may be that in the early Trenton Spring, it will be found that there will be a great many changes there.

FRESHWATERMAN LAMENTS END OF SAILING PERIOD

Sailor of Old School Gives Reporter His Views on Dredging

THE SCRIBE'S RAMBLES

Activity Along Waterfront Is Much More Pronounced

Gulls and garbage, fishboats and speedboats, men working and men loafing, children playing heedlessly on the parade wall, and firemen shouting warning to them, fishermen untangling a line hopefully through a hole in the harbour ice, another standing with upraised spear, gazing into the water and expectantly poising for an unwary fish to materialize from the murky depths, a lighter in tow of a tug forefoot slowly scraping varnish, empty bottles floating somewhere in the bay —all these things, some ordinary and some extraordinary, go to make up the reporter's idle wanderings along the Belleville waterfront this morning.

Somewhere among the numerous humans encountered were not hard to find. This morning, conversation being about the fastest thing to do on a lazy April morning, I took a trip to the fishguills, hundreds of them, carried on a real commercial fish business. Heavily-quarrelling over bits of fish, delectable pieces of garbage floating in the water above by sanitary Bellevillians, and theirights to forage in some particularly choice garbage pile.

Ice in the harbour is still solid, but the tug Wellington is still at the Bridge broke the ice away from the Belleville Boat Works dock where they take on coal. One freshwater sailor, an old school lammied there, passing of the sailing ship era, as he declared the steam tug was a mere upstart, being brought by boat into Belleville. After the tug passed the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Narrows near Desoronto would do for Belleville, this oracle remarked. As far as the Belleville and Trenton were concerned, they might as well be non-existent as far as he declared that the Murray Canal guarded by Fort Point which a twelve footer, while at Belleville there was often fifteen feet of water, was a mere ditch. While this tale may be all true, the reporter pointed out that there is a fair hope that the Bay of Quinte might return to its former glory as a sailing route.

Continuing on his ramble, the scribe took in the Bridge Hotel, Uncle Ed Kerr's Boathouse dock, which was blown away by the ice fall in a storm, the "Old Age Pension", frozen in the slips where the Prince Edward Island, the several motor boats having their bottoms painted, and finally the Belleville Boat Works where the new dock, where Commodore George H. Gooderham's yacht, the Canada, will be fitted out.

Over one hundred feet above the deck of this trim little yacht a sailor, one of the crew, was at work on the mast, seated away at the varnish on the mast. Another sailor on top of the wheel house, sixty feet high, was engaged at the same task. Both were seated on boards to be taken off, both masts are polished and varnished, and must be ready for another season. The crew of seven arrived here yesterday from Toronto, and will remain here in charge of Command of Captain J. B. Strachan of Toronto, Mr. McDonald, the latter chronic about the 24th of May.

The Cruiser Canada is powered with a Diesel Engine installed new two years ago in it is made of teak and has beautiful wood decks and hatches, trimmed with polished brass. Electric light, hot and cold water, and various other conveniences make it a real home on the water. This is the only boat which is wintered at Belleville aside from small craft.

One of each pair of ducks is pinioned, that is, has one jet back, while the female is black and white, and looks much like the tame variety.

May Add Swans

The Belleville Sanctuary is attracting some attention throughout the province, and Mr. Turner is working in conjunction with Mr. Jack Miner to make it one of the finest sanctuaries in Canada. Another feature which will be added is the first opportunity for a pair of swans, taken from the Niagara River after going over the Falls. During migration, many of these swans are maimed or killed by drifting ice in the Niagara Falls after landing in the river. They are usually picked up below the Falls and if possible their wings are fixed and they are placed in some sanctuary. Belleville is in fine for a pair of these birds and they will be a welcome addition.

Three years ago Mr. Turner placed three pairs of mourning doves in the sanctuary, and last year they had increased in number till there were over two hundred. They are a migratory bird, leaving here about the first of September and returning about the last of April, and are great favorites. They should multiply rapidly from now on, especially with the protection given them.

Belleville's birdland is giving the city a good name throughout the Province.

League Officers

The Belleville Sanctuary is operated by the Jack Miner League, Kingsville, Ont. Mr. Turner is president, as well as overseer of the place, and Mr. Irvin Lyons, Game Inspector, is secretary-treasurer. Mr. John D. Bleecker owns the land where the sanctuary is situated, and he has very kindly given the league the use of the land. According to Mr. Turner, the grain with which the birds are fed each day is getting a little low, and any help which may be given the officials of the sanctuary would be greatly appreciated. Any donation received will be acknowledged in The Ontario Intelligencer.

GOSPEL MESSAGE IS BORN IN SONG

Gospel Alliance Conference Is Attended By Good Sized Audience

A goodly number were present last evening at the Gospel Alliance annual convention and Bible conference which is being held in the auditorium of the Y.M.C.A. building under the auspices of the Christian and Missionary Alliance.

Taking as her text the words found in 2nd Corinthians, 11th chapter and 5th verse Miss Decker gave a heart searching message on the new birth and more sincere Christian life. The speaker urged upon all to examine themselves in the light of God's word to their faith and to continue and improve in the faith. In a powerful appeal for right living.

Miss Decker's address was earnestly on progress in the Christian life and his address was interesting and to all present it was not only a thoughtful but inspiring appeal to lead a Christian life.

An interesting feature of the meeting was the musical message in song given by the evangelistic trio composed of Misses Decker, Ginter and Swanson. These consecrated singers give most pleasing numbers and their ability to render all have well trained voices surrounding country and are highly appreciated. The Prince would was the steamer enroute to go into the bush in search of some shooting.

MUSIC

Bridge Street Choir Present Costume Program of Older Days

Singing songs and choruses and solos of the days of somewhere about two generations ago, Bridge Street United Church choir under the direction of Mr. Sam Anelin, director of music and with Mr. Y. F. Hunt at the piano last night appeared in costume of the "good old days" to a large audience. Sentiment and sentiment and kindliness of the era from which the members of the choir had gone to endless trouble to wear the head-dress, the costumes and the shawls of the years of the past. It was some time since the appearance of the latest number on the platform of the school rooms before the audience could settle down to the hearing of the music on created by the styles of the days of yore. Mr. Anelin and Mr. Babcock save a very fine opening solos as they were pursuing the very little knowledge of the members of the present day choir and sympathetic relationship to the characters who lived with the passage of time. This little interlude was in keeping with the spirit of the program. Mr. Anelin as director united his part completely.

Sweet music rendered with the decision of years of practice was noted, the large bow ties, the facial adornments of the men, the bonnets and the occasional hat of the women, the clothes, all went together to make a return back into the earlier times. The program follows:

Road Bookkeeping is Essential, Government Expert Told Road Men

Weed Menace Pointed Out By J. D. McLeod At Shire Hall Meeting

The road superintendents and pathmen gathered at Shire Hall yesterday afternoon while given two instructive addresses by O. H. Zoller, accountant from the Department of Highways and J. D. McLeod, District Weed Supervisor for Eastern Ontario for the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa. Both speakers stressed the necessity of co-operation between the various municipalities if the system outlined for keeping the books and controlling the weed problem was to be a success. The men departed for their homes and several occupations which neither filled or carry on the work of road building, one of the biggest problems facing any municipality today.

Road Expans'on

Mr. Zoller told of the growth of the system whereby the several municipalities are paid their subsidy from the government for the roads built with part their municipality. In 1934 the first Good Roads' Convention met and in 1936 the first horseless carriage or motor car appeared on the road. "It is very hard to figure the dividend from the good road," said the speaker, "but certainly the municipality and the country at large prosper from the tourist trade and above all means of communication between centers is much easier than other, the old system. Today there is in the province a mileage of 52,300 miles of different classes of roads, 9,417 are being provincial highway, 7,945 miles county system and 42,-941 miles of township roads with 12 cop ilities in the northern development. In 1936 the provincial auditor requested that all municipalities adopt the system laid down by the Good Roads Association and 237 townships last year were working under the scheme.

Bookkeeping

The road superintendent, said Mr. Zoller, depends on the forman at construction for reliable information and this cannot be obtained unless the patrolman fills out the form provided in a concise manner. The same is true of intendent certifies to all monies spent and he should see that it is distributed to the proper roads and jobs. The municipality should pay promptly and then the auditors, who examine the books would not have to trace different sums. All vouchers for work done should be made out on proper bill heads so the work of the auditor would be more thorough and results more quickly attained. All municipalities should pay by cheque and th's brought a storm of protest from the members present. Hastings county has no banking facilities in the northern part and if paid by cheque the bank charge or exchange which is taken off the labore. Mr. Zoller explained that a working agreement should be arranged with the different banks to handle the cheques at par but Mr. Haggerty, the treasurer, told the speaker he could not be arranged.

Bookkeeping

All cheques shou'd be entered in the cash book before d'stribut on and at all times the municipality or the auditor could tell exactly the amount being spent on roads clear to the several works under construction. The road superintendents shou'd not be hampered with by any one member of the township council but any complaint or suggestion should be considered by the council as a whole and the superintendent should give heed to every co-operation. The speaker brought to the attention of the men the necessity of preaching safety-first methods to the workmen and that they could go a long ways in making the highways more safe.

Weed Menace

Mr. J. D. McLeod has been connected with the weed inspection service for the length of the province for the past five years and is qualified to speak on the menace. In opening his remarks the speaker said that there was no weed that could not be controlled on cultivated lands and that weeds grow and spread on vacant lands and roadsides. The public property, which is the roadways, should be an example for the owners of private property and with all working for one end the weed menace can be controlled and obliterated. The Department of Agriculture has for years operated in weed control as laid down under the Weed Control Act but every municipality has its own conditions to combat. Hastings County has considerable brush and swamp lands and if it would be fully to suggest a remedy, but where there is cultivated land the Weed Act says that weeds must be cut. The whole problem is being dealt with along educational lines, said Mr. McLeod, but force will be used if necessary to eradicate the evil. The question was asked what was the best time to cut the weeds and the speaker stated it all depended on local conditions but generally weed should be cut before the seed ripens.

Method of Cutting

The method of cutting was fully discussed and the speaker gave as his opinion that a mower shou'd be used first followed with a couple of men with scythes. A foreman should always accompany the gang and a clean job done. Every time the weeds are cut the roots weaken and eventually the plant will die out and be eradicated from that section. Community pride is a great factor in combating the weed menace. If every farmer along a township or county road would cut the weeds his own farm in the matter of weeds would be simple. In such a case the Weed Department of Highways will give every co-operation. There is a great deal of complaint on the roadside would keep down the weeds but that method is a thing of the past. Asked if chemicals could be recommended Mr. McLeod said no. The chemical is almost prohibitive but the work can be done with chemicals. Probably it will be a means in later years of destroying weeds but at present it is not. Asked if it was compulsory to cut brush and the speaker stated it was not but it was desirable. When the brush is cut, weed cutting is made easier, said McLeod.

Worst of Weeds

Questioned by the reporter after the address as to the most obnoxious of weeds in this locality Mr. McLeod stated that Chicory, Blue Weed, Wild Carrot, Wash'ngton and Johnson Grass are the most prevalent and the hardiest of all the weeds.

The Weed Control Act is here given for guidance.

The Council of a Municipality shall cause to be inserted in a newspaper circulating in the Municipality, a notice of the appointment of the weed inspector and shall forward the name to the Provincial Weed Inspector, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, Ontario, before February 15th of each year. Members of Municipal Councils, Township Road Superintendents or Township Road Foremen are not eligible for appointment as weed inspectors.

It is the duty of the Council to see that ALL WEEDS growing upon gravel or highways are destroyed at the proper time to prevent the ripening of their seed. If the Council neglects to have this done, the grant to which it may be entitled under the Highway Improvement Act may be withheld.

The Municipal Weed Inspector must see that the Act is enforced on all roads, public parks and other property within the confines of the Municipality including highways, Provincial highways, county roads, township roads, boundaries, school and church properties and all private property.

The Inspector is not authorized to enter premises until if roads are found to be neglected, he should consult with the Council and only if necessary, the reeve of the Municipality. If the neglect is not remedied, he should then report to the Provincial Weed Inspector. In the case of railways, notice should be given to the station master of the Company, residing in the district.

7. (1) It shall be the duty of every road authority to see that all weeds growing upon streets or highways under its jurisdiction are cut down or destroyed at the proper time to prevent the ripening of their seed and to appoint such officers as may be necessary for that purpose.

(a) In this sect on "road authority" shall have the same meaning as in The Highway Improvement Act.

(2) Upon the report of the Minister of Agriculture that any road authority is in default in the duty imposed by subsection 1, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may direct that any sums of money payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund in respect of roads under the jurisdiction of such road authority under The Highway Improvement Act or any other Act relating to highways shall be withheld until it is shown to the satisfaction of the Minister of Highways that the road authority has carried out the duty so imposed.

(3) The council of a local municipality may by by-law provide that thereafter the annual cost of cutting down or destroying noxious weeds on any highway under the control of the municipality, but which has not been assumed by the corporation sha'l be specially assessed upon the lands abutting d'rectly on such highway.

(4) Neither the passing of a by-law under subsection 3 nor the expenditure of public money for cutting down or destroying noxious weeds upon a highway shal 'be an assumption of such highway for pub'c use by the municipal corporation having control of such highway as is now under such corporat on liable for repair or for damages resulting from non-repair within the meaning of The Municipal Act.

HIGHWAY CLOSED TO ALL TRAFFIC

Bottom of Foxboro-Stirling Road in Poor Shape

(By Staff Reporter)

Foxboro, April 5—The Belleville to Stirling highway, from Foxboro to Stirling, has been closed for all traffic and reynolds via West Huntingdon. This is due to the fact that the highway has fallen out of the new Provincial Highway No. 14 since the frost went out. This was to have been expected, of course, since the road was only built last year.

The worst spot on the road is between Boardman's Hill and Stirling where several cars were mired and had to be pulled out. So far all right. Since then men have been placed at each end of the closed road and the Stirling end to warn motorists to try some different route. Asked as to how long the road would be closed, the road men said that the weather would be the deciding factor. They would probably continue for another week or so, the road would likely be open at Stirling time, but as the probabilities state that rain is in the offing, the road will likely remain closed for a longer period than that.

Although it is several miles farther by driving via West Huntingdon, the road is in fine shape. From Stirling to Frankford, the roads are rather badly cut up, but the road in the same can be said of the county highway from Frankford to Trenton.

CHASED, CAUGHT BOTTLE THIEF

Halifax, N. S. Apr. 5—The depredations of a modern Raffles in the emissions ran to bottles of milk and cream rather than jewels and bank and diamond bracelets have been effectively checked by a brave lady who did not hesitate to pursue the pilferer and again come into possession of milk for the cat and cream for the coffee.

The lady was observing the mild dawn of the first day of spring from a second floor window when she saw a figure stooping on the front porch. Her first impression was that it was the mail carrier but closer scrutiny soon set the fact that the individual below had possessed himself of a couple dozen of dairy products.

Throwing up a dressing gown and kicking her feet into slippers, the courageous woman dashed downstairs and into the street in pursuit of the thief. After a short run and a merry one resulted in her overtaking him.

"Give me back that milk," demanded the lady.

"Yes, ma'am," acquiesced the thief, and produced both milk and cream from the pockets of his overcoat.

Cautioned that he would be well advised to leave his merchandise inside the front porch in future, the nightman on the following morning said:

"Don't worry. You won't be bothered again."

GREAT ART

Madame Albani has passed. She in the height of her glory as a singer brought a great reputation to Canada for she was a native of Quebec and made her debut in Montreal. She was one of the world's greatest vocalists and so prominent in art circles that she it was who was chosen to sing at the funeral of the late Queen Victoria and at the coronation of her son, Edward Seventh. She was of the rank of Patti and of the Swedish nightingale, Jenny Lind.

The world has always honored its great voices. And Canada has had her share of the world's praise. At the present one of her natives, Edward Johnson, is named with the great in song. This should be proof enough that Canadians have surroundings, the social and family life, which will develop the great artist.

The entire world bowed before Madame Patti, for song is international. Her like will be honored with similar plaudits whatever the race from which he or she springs, so universal is the appeal.

Madame Patti should be a model for aspiring Canadians who seek supremacy in song.

THE CITY WE SHOULD HAVE

The Montreal Gazette discussing "The City Beautiful" and the work of the City Improvement League of Montreal expresses what is true of every city.

"The better town-planning movement has come to stay. It is not, as some seem to assume, what might be better described as a cult had promulgated by the urgency of the aesthetic few. Even were this true, why should it be thought that beauty is a thing apart from every life or the art is confined to books, fine pictures, cathedrals and handicrafts, and has neither lot nor part in the everyday out of ordinary houses and the thoroughfares into which our daily traffic is hurled? Genuine art has a much deeper meaning and a much more practical utterance, a function which comes at closest grip with the convenience, comfort, pleasure and the physical and moral health of the whole community. And by no more rational and surer route can such benefits be properly safeguarded and insured for the future than by the concerted effort to lay out the town plan so that it may best promote the greatest happiness of the greatest number. The outlook upon life and property of any community is reflected and finds physical expression in the structure and development of the city, in its traffic and buildings and parks.

"Get to the bottom of the question, and it will be found that every town is attractive by reason of its pleasantness, and that in child its general perspective can impart to the beholder. The city beautiful is not an idle dream. It has come within the range of practical politics and within the compass of human power to attain. This conviction is steadily growing, and the educational campaign to crystallize and consolidate public opinion in this direction is based upon sound common sense and is in accord with the best of humane and economic principles.

"In these days when, as in the Middle Ages, there is so marked a trend towards the city, and traffic congestion is one of the acutest of modern problems, it becomes imperative that town planning be achieved so as to take time by the forelock. Who can doubt that the economy of household or city, has its marked reactions upon the entire social life and habits of the people?"

ROADS

Matters of interest to the County of Hastings were discussed at the conference of patrolmen of the four township of Sidney, Thurlow, Tyendinaga and Rawdon yesterday.

This emphasizes the fact that the road today is the most talked of thing in municipal activities. Roads were never so essential as they are today. (Of course bridges are included in the term roads for they are part of roads.)

The Roman Empire constructed roads, making a network which permitted their legionaries to march in haste to any part of the far flung empire. Some of their roads last to this day built of the most permanent construction.

While present day construction of roads will hardly hold up against that of the Romans in permanence, the world of today is a greater builder of roads than the Romans were. Rome could build her roads with slave labor but the roads of today cost a merry penny for the slavery that the Romans knew that of captive populations does not exist. A great share of the budget of the county and of the province is concerned with raising money for the construction of roads.

It is no wonder then that the men who have the building of roads and who have the spending of the money to meet the expenditure look for all the information that they can glean on this important subject.

Road building is not for today and tomorrow only. Policies have to be so flexible and all-embracing as to foresee the trend in the future. That is, roads are built with an eye to the coming ages.

In most eastern countries, we read, women are discarding their veils in order to be like western women. They'll have to discard corsets before they can fly.

SIDELIGHTS

A SAILOR

Oh, I would be a sailor,
For sailors never fret
About the things the landsman dreads,
Like taxes, rent and debt.

None know as well as sailors
How simple life can be,
For they can fling all else aside
And only heed the sea.

The sea that never changes,
However life may change,
The sea that calls to sailor-souls
Has always something strange.

Oh, I would be a sailor,
Unvexed by little things,
And swinging back to centuries
Beneath some ship's brown wings!

And I would go a-sailing
Forever and a day,
Beneath some ship's brown sails unfurled,
And toss the rest away!

—Aline Michaelis.

PAUSE AND CONSIDER the building of the new bridge on Bridge street. Some business men of Belleville claim that the building should be deferred as late in the season as possible. They point out that the closing of the bridge in the tourist season would divert this traffic through the busiest part of Front street which is about all the traffic and parked cars now that it can stand for. This surely is a matter worthy of consideration by the City Fathers.

SIXTY-FIVE EDITORS and executives of farm magazines in the United States will visit the Northern-Ontario mining belt in June. They will be surprised for their idea of mining camps is largely centred in red-eye saloons, bad liquor and bad men. Canada mining camps have never had any of that gun-toting crowd, just wouldn't stand for it, that's all, and they've had the same kind of people that flock to all mining camps. They'll also find a government owned and operated railway which pays its way, is operated with kindness and courtesy to patrons and is distinguished among other things for a chief executive, George W. Lee, the man who first put he smile in railway operation, and a red-headed passenger twin conductor called "Paddy" Jessup who can call more people by their first names be they millionaires or miners than Herbert Hoover or Will Rogers.

A GOLD RUSH to Poorman, Alaska, was reported in February to the U. S. War Dept. by Sergeant Growden, telegraph operator at Ruby, Alaska 150 miles near with gold-hunters because between 1880 and 1924 the placer mines yielded $234,000,000 (on the authority of Major Gen. Greely) and the estimate of placer gold still left was $350,000,000. All this is stimulating to adventurers. Of searchers for gold John J. Underwood, an Alaskan historian, writes:

"There are hundreds of men in Alaska who have more money than they really want and yet find more happiness in work than in spending it. Now appropriately named a few days ago." Poorman lies about 150 miles east of Norton Sound and fifty south of the Yukon River. The last census gave it a population of 217. When Growden arrived every cabin was crowded, the store housed as many rainbow-chasers as could get in, and the local mining plants had closed down, because all the miners were rushing to stake ground in the new field.

The Geological Survey has something to say, by way of caution to get-rich-quick invaders. Gravel-panning, it admits, may reward those early on the ground, but it will be months before a true estimate can be made of the wealth of the district. As labor is scarce, newcomers will have to develop their own claims. No one should go in who has not enough money for his return fare as well as for food and shelter.

Press Comments on Amalgamation

Among the references to the amalgamation of the two dailies in Belleville into The Ontario Intelligencer which are much appreciated are the comments of the press in various parts of the province. Among these are the following:

BELLEVILLE PAPERS MERGE

On April 1st, the Belleville Ontario and Intelligencer will be amalgamated, the name of the new paper to be the Ontario Intelligencer. These two papers have for almost a century been serving the Bay of Quinte district. The Intelligencer was founded as a weekly paper in 1834 and in 1867 it became a daily. For half a century the Intelligencer was owned by Sir MacKenzie Bowell, who for many years represented North Hastings in the Federal Parliament and was for a time Premier of Canada. On his death, Sir MacKenzie's son, Charles, assumed the management and (Cer his death, Mrs. Bowell became owner and manager. For the past few years the Intelligencer has been owned and operated by a company.

The Ontario Chronicle was founded many years ago and was for a time a weekly periodical but since 1870 it has been a daily. For many years the Ontario was under the ownership of Carman Bros., but about a year ago this newspaper was purchased by Morton and Bertie Reid for one month it has been owned by Mr. Morton, who now assumes the management of the merged publication, henceforth to be known as the Ontario Intelligencer.

Both these publications have served the Bay of Quinte district well for almost a century and will no doubt be in a position to render even more efficient service. We wish the Ontario Intelligencer every success.—Campbellford Herald.

TWO PAPERS IN ONE

The Ontario Intelligencer makes its appearance as Belleville's only daily newspaper. This amalgamation of two well known papers means that each of the former cities in Hastings will now be served by one local daily publication. This has been the trend in recent years, apparently made necessary by the heavy expense connected with the publishing of a paper.

The average reader who pays his dollar per year, however little or much he may be, for his newspaper has no idea of the expense connected with getting it together. Were he to try obtaining such information, he would realize that the news presented to him in each issue of the paper, and the publication on his purse would be both amazing and illuminating. Collection of news is an expensive business and the cost of newsprint paper that enables the same to be placed before the public is the largest expenditure. All this entails is reduced by amalgamation such as that in Belleville.

Early in the Bay of Quinte has had a long and interesting newspaper history, the first weekly publication being established there in 1821. In 1834 the present Intelligencer appeared and in 1870 the first daily publication of it was issued; so that the amalgamated publication will have a publication record for a long time.

Belleville also saw the rise and fall of several other journalistic ventures, and with these were associated many well-known names in the field of journalism as well as in the public life of the country. The first issue of the combined paper celebrates the events in the history of Belleville. The edition contains a great deal of information of interest to the people of Belleville and district, as well as to the number of newspaper workers scattered throughout the country.—Toronto Globe.

BELLEVILLE A ONE-PAPER CITY

There comes to this desk the first copy of The Ontario Intelligencer, Ontario's latest merged newspaper and a combination of two publications that have been in existence in the city of Belleville for a number of years.

The publishers may have chosen April 1st as date of publication for the merger should take effect, but it is by no means a joke, for the birth of this paper was perhaps the last of Ontario's urban communities in which two daily newspapers strove to command public support, and, as such, the publishers are wisdom of a newspaper marriage has been long apparent.

In the public hands of those who have been chosen to direct its fortunes the Ontario Intelligencer, which is rather a mouthful will undoubtedly render Belleville and the surrounding district a much better service than it would be possible for either of the former publications to grant. Both of these have served well and commanded satisfactory support from the community to which they appealed, but their influence and circulation were necessarily restricted by the limited resources available.

Now that the Ontario and the Intelligencer have united, they will be united for Belleville having a better newspaper than ever before and from what we know of those in charge of the new publication, we believe that their efforts will be speedily realized and that the residents of Belleville and the district will soon appreciate the wisdom of the step that has been taken.—Brockville Recorder and Times.

NO TWO-DAILY SMALL CITIES REMAIN

Consolidation in Belleville of The Ontario and The Intelligencer puts a definite end to the two dailies contemporer situation in cities of Ontario with less than 63,000 population, and even in one of the five which exceed this figure Windsor) there is only one daily published. In the twenty-seven cities of the provinces there are now but 31 daily newspapers (some with morning and evening editions) compared with 46 in the same places in 1910. In twenty years fourteen cities which had at least two dailies have come down to the one daily standard. There are a few which have acquired a daily since 1910 owing to their growth, but the comparison covers English dailies, not including district papers:

	1910	1930
Toronto	4	4
Hamilton	3	2
Ottawa	3	2
Windsor	1	1
London	2	2
Brantford	2	1
Kitchener	2	1
Port William	2	1
Oshawa	0	1
St. Catharines	2	1
Sault Ste. Marie	0	1
Peterborough	2	1
Kingston	2	1
Guelph	1	1
Port Arthur	2	1
Stratford	2	1
Niagara Falls	1	1
Sarnia	1	1
St. Thomas	1	1
Chatham	2	1
North Bay	0	1
East Windsor	0	0
Belleville	2	1
Galt	2	1
Owen Sound	0	1
Woodstock	1	1

The reduction in number is all the more remarkable when it is remembered that these twenty-seven cities had, by the census of 1911 a population of more than 1,000,000 while the 31 census will give them close to 1,500,000, both including the suburbs of Toronto. In fact the growth of city population in Ontario is already sufficient to offset reduction in number of city dailies, these, of course, serving a much greater population than they did twenty years alone.

At any rate, the consolidation in Belleville writes "finis" on the operation of two daily newspapers in cities of moderate size. The papers which form this final merger have very old, the Intelligencer having been established in 1834 and the Ontario (originally the Chronicle) having a history dating back to 1861. The Intelligencer has been published in Belleville are among the oldest in the province.—Toronto Globe.

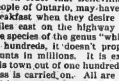
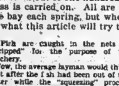
Fish Hatchery Deals In Millions of Fish Fry



In order that Bellevillians, and, as far as that goes, the people of Ontario, may have fresh whitefish on their tables for breakfast when they desire it, there is situated just about two miles east on the highway a fish-hatchery which produces not only the species of the genus "whitefish." It doesn't propagate them in hundreds, it doesn't propagate them in thousands, but it counts in millions. It is extremely doubtful if one citizen in this town out of one hundred knows just how the hatchery business is carried on. All are aware that fry are turned loose in the bay each spring, but where do these fry come from? That is what this article will try to tell you.



Fish are caught in the nets and fifteen of these businesses and is making a success of, all of them. stripped" for the purpose of the hatchery.

Now, the average layman would think that after the fish had been out of the water while the "squeezing" process was going on (it really doesn't take any length of time) the fish would have given one last gasp and passed away. Far from it! In fact, so speedily is the operation carried on that eight out of ten fish are thrown back into the bay and allowed to swim away, probably eventually to be caught in somebody else's net who would not be so kind to them.

When one comes to think of it is it really a wonderful work that is being carried on in the hatchery. Belleville fish hatchery has been established here since 1914, just sixteen years ago. Now the industry stands as one of the largest and most successful hatcheries that is controlled by the government. A few years ago the hatcheries were under the control of the Dominion Government, the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but since they have been turned over to the Provincial Governments and Ontario has some of the finest hatcheries in the province. Fish are caught in the nets in the bay, the business is carried on in the hatchery.

There are eight hundred and fifty-one jars in the hatchery. In each of these jars there may be as high as one hundred and ten thousand eggs, although the general average is about one hundred and ten thousand eggs. And each and every one of those eggs is good and will be a little whitefish some time.

Placed in the jars last fall, it is estimated that from five to six days after the ice leaves the bay they will hatch. As soon as this occurs they are promptly put in the bay and left to feed for themselves. They are not kept in the hatchery at all after hatching. The tiny fish, not bigger than a minnow are placed in a large flat bottomed scow, known as the fry boat. There is a large screen and a rear door to this fry boat. As the scow is towed slowly by the regular fisheries boat these doors are open and the little fish thus get a constant stream of running water. Fresh, running water is essential in the hatchery business. When the fish are first placed in the jars, they are then, too, treated to constantly changing water.

After the fish have been released in the bay, the hatchery business is over. It is not their concern how many of the fry live and it cannot be estimated just how, many of the millions that are planted in the bay survive the struggle for existence.

The local hatcheries confines itself solely to the hatching of whitefish. Some pickerel and some trout, however, are taken from the bay and the whitefish are put in the Bay of Quinte. Yet the Government is required by Northern Ontario to stock the lakes in order that they may have some good fishing. Whitefish are caught in the fall, as are the trout, but the hatchery men yesterday as we prepared to leave had a fine capture some pickerel, which spawn in the spring.

In about ten days' time the fisheries boat will start out into the bay and lay down the nets.

As soon as the eggs have been procured, fertilized and placed in jars they will be left alone until the fall when they will be hatched into tiny pickerel fry.

And so it is a continuous process. In the spring pickerel eggs are collected and in the fall whitefish eggs. These are not secured in the bay, but are obtained in more from outside points in the fall.

It is a great and good work that the fisheries are doing. If the bays, rivers and lakes of Ontario were not constantly restocked it would only be a matter of time until they were "fished" out. Tourists from the United States are so ever to come to this country and try their luck with rod and reel that thousands and thousands of fine game fish are caught each summer.

HELD PRISONER FOR 60 YEARS

Fanatical Father Kept His Daughter Right at Home on Farm

(Canadian Press)

Middletown, Conn., April 5. — The delith of Peter Wilson, ninety-six years old, a farmer, of Middle Haddam, ten miles from here, revealed a story of ignorance and loneliness zealously guarded for sixty years, when his daughter, Lillie, sixty years old, came to see her father's body.

It was the first time in her life that Miss Wilson had left her father's farm. Electric lights, paved streets, trolley cars and stone buildings were a surprise to the woman who drove into town with a neighbor, dressed in a sunbonnet and a rusty black gown trailing about her ankles.

Middle Haddam, a village of five hundred inhabitants, is set in a circle of stony hills on the bank of the Connecticut River. There is no railroad near, and the roads are rough and rocky. On the farm, six or eight miles from the village, Lillie Wilson was born.

Her mother died when she was a baby and since then her father has kept her a close prisoner in the tiny house. Heard as the rocks of his hills Peter Wilson did all the work necessary to keep up his fifty-acre farm, which kept him and his daughter alive until a few weeks ago, when a fall fractured his hip.

Few automobiles came down the road where the Wilsons lived, and when neighbors, driving by, offered to stop for a few words of gossip, Wilson came out with a shotgun, warning them away. After a while the neighbors stopped coming. Many of the farmers in the district thought that the Wilsons and newcomers, did not know there was a woman in the house.

Years ago Wilson's two other daughters rebelled against their father. One dark night they took a horse and buggy and ran away. They went to New York, where Phoebe still lives, unmarried. Her sister, Emily, married a man named Erickson. They never came home.

Books and newspapers were taboo in the Wilson household. Lillie Wilson knew nothing of the march of modern life. When there was shopping to be done in the Middle Haddam house it was her father who took the horse and went to town, first asking a neighbor to lock his daughter in.

When Wilson broke his hip a few weeks ago, a neighbor took him to the home. He did not want to go, she had to stay at home. He refused, and take care of the farm until her father got back. He was almost angry.

When the aged farmer died the neighbors drove out and told his daughter. She climbed into the automobile —the first she had ever been in—and sat quietly on the seat by Middlefield. Her eyes opened wide as they saw buildings and the town, and her escort was busy explaining the uses of everything she saw. Such things as radio, phonographs and talking pictures she refused to believe in until she saw them.

Peter Wilson's will was opened it was found that he left an estate of $50,000 to his daughter, the result of the years of hoarding on his farm. Miss Wilson will take her inheritance and begin to live the life denied her all these many years. She probably will go to her sister's home in New York.

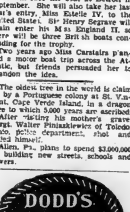
Peter Wilson asked in his will that he be buried in the family plot. He is buried in the hill where he had lived.

THREE BRITISH BOATS ENTER DETROIT RACES

(Canadian Press)

Comox, Isle of Wight, April 5.—Betty Carnalus has ranged herself with Sir Thomas Lipton in the matter of determination to win a sporis trophy from the United States. Sir Thomas has spent 22,500 000 trying to win the America Cup with a Shamrock yacht.

Miss Carnalus has already spent thousands of pounds in trying to win the Harmsworth trophy with her motor boat, and now she has purchased her own shipyard here and intends to keep building motorboats until she produces a winner.



Dear her newest boat, are now ayard able. It is a vessel 28 feet long which will have two supercharged Napier engines of the Schneider Trophy type, each capable of developing 1,000 horsepower. SHANGHAI HAS MOST 'YELLOW' NEWSPAPERS

(Canadian Press)

Shanghai, April 5.—The Chinese business or professional man who straps from the train into the narrow path usually reads all about his sins in the papers.

A survey made recently by military authorities indicates that there are more scandal sheets in Shanghai than any other city in the eastern hemisphere and probably the world. One hundred and ten or low tri-weekly news papers are published in the cities metropolis and are all devoted to prying news out of it to print.

To keep these papers supplied with information concerning the doings of Chinese who are in the spotlight a large army of Chinese scandal mongers is constantly kept on the job. They appear at the most amazing times at the most unseen pla places.

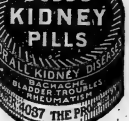
GRASS THAT THRIVES BENEATH THE SNOW

(Canadian Press)

Seattle, April 5.—Experts from the United States Department of Agriculture predict that the strange winter grass discovered on an Oregon farm and hailed by them as the "lost grass" of Europe may revolutionize farming and dairying in the west.

The story of the grass is a farm romance. Similar to grass which is prospered in Europe a century or more ago, it flourishes in summer, when other grass is green, but thrives in winter when it is covered deep in snow. It forms a perfect turn, even under the snow.

Because the experts found it will grow under most severe conditions, without irrigation, and in the driest, rainy regions, they view it as a solution of the problem of the logged-off lands of the Pacific northwest.



Seeds for sale next summer, northwest will be sold exclusive'y in Seattle by the Seattle Commercial Club.

The agency was a gift of Mrs. E. H. Hanley, on whose farm the seed was discovered. She has no personal interest in the hospita'.

PLAN CHANGES IN PLAY-OFFS

Defeat of Boston Bruins by Canadiens may Lead to Alterations

Toronto, April 5.—The defeat of the Boston Bruins in the final Stanley Cup series may lead to some suggestions whereby the play-off system be changed. Canadiens led off the pace in the first half of the season and at the end of the regular season were in a position where they could almost select their opponents in the first round. The Bruins went from record to record and the strain of their brilliant run during the year, coupled with the hard series against the Maroons and a layoff from Thursday to Tuesday waiting for the Canadiens, with only one practice on Saturday, did not do them any good. They were tebye from while the Canucks were getting better.

The proceeds of the play-offs are divided by a rather complicated arrangement. In the N'tional Hockey series the net, after the rinks and travelling expenses had been deducted were divided 45 per cent. to the players' pool, 30 per cent. to each of the two clubs and 15 per cent. to the league for the first three games. In the fourth game the players' pool participate, each club getting 40 per cent. and the league 20 per cent.

In the two game series between the Canadiens and Black Hawks, the Rangers and Ottawa, the players received 50 per cent. each club and 25 per cent. and the league 50 per cent., the clubs and league at all stages of the best two out of three game series between the Canadiens and the Rangers the players and league each received 50 per cent., but if a third had been necessary, each club would have received 40 per cent. and the league 20. In the two game final between the Canadiens and Bruins the players received 60 per cent. each club and the league 30 per cent. If a third game had been necessary, the clubs and the league would each have received one-third. In each series the players' pool was divided 60 to the winners and 40 to the losers.

Of the six clubs that qualified for the playdowns only three were finan cially benefitted as a result of the play offs, the Canadiens' owners getting in on the club's share of the games against the Bruins but the club itself did not receive anything for the two series with Chicago and Rangers. Maroons got a cut out of the four games played but the while the Boston club benefitted from three games and also the series with Canadiens. The Ottawa, Ranger and Chicago clubs did not benefit any more than did the four clubs that did not qualify, Maple Leafs, Detroit, Montreal and Pittsburg. Every club in the league shares in the league's percentage of the play-off monies.

TORONTO LEAFS MEET MONTREAL

Steve O'Neill and His Benedict men Start For the North

Daytona Beach, Fla., April 5.—Shortracked and slumbered around for a few-thee-will en route yesterday from Tarpon Springs to the east coast city the Leafs put in a thrilling 11-hour journey.

The athletes sliked off their thrills by dashing out of the car at every stop for the purpose of hunting up a lunch counter. The stops were many and the lunch counters were few. In between stops a little sleep was had, which Tommy Daly being "taken for a ride" by Steve O'Neill piloted his athletes out of Tarpon Springs yesterday morning. It rained here and there along the route but the sun was shining when they arrived in Daytona.

Steve O'Neill reported.

The Toronto players were given a rousing send-off by the Tarpon Springs residents and the baseball atmosphere pressed by many that they would return next season. The players and their gentlemanly wags made themselves popular with the "home folks of the South."

The Leafs not only reason the Leafs are here is to play Eddie Holly's Montreal Royals in an exhibition series of two games, with the first scheduled for today and the second for Sunday. The Royals have been training here for a month. The games with the Canadian rivals in the International League will give opportunity to compare notes.

Steve O'Neill definitely decided to use Owl Goldsworthy and Ben Ollom in the box against the Royals. The batting order will be as follows: Dyer, ss.; Richardson, 3rd, Sheehy, lf.; Fetrie cf., Burke, 2d., McHenry and Rabbitt cf., Ben Ollom, jr., O'Neill, c., Cantrell p., and Brown, p.

Will Work Sunday

Clare Pfafer and Nick Harrison are slated to work for the Leafs on Sunday against Art Ruble. If his injured finger will permit he will be left off, while Eddie Phillips and Hugh Wise will share the backstop work.

Cantrell, Ruble, Jim O'Neill, Paddy Burke and Ben Ollom made the trip over here from Tarpon Springs by motor.

Immediately after Sunday's game the Leafs entrain for Evansville, Indiana, O'Neill and his men have expressed pleasure at the prospect of a pleasant week or rain in Florida. Snow is all probability will be their fate in Indiana.

The Royals have had it on the Leafs for training quarters.

JACKIE, KID BERG CLOUTS DECISION

English 'Boxer' Wins Many Friends by Display in New York

New York, April 5—Jackie Kid Berg as game a bundle of fighting man as ever came out of England, turned a crowd of 12,000 at the fistiana into a babbling mob with his fierce courage and fighting spirit, and belied out a ten-round decision over Joe Glick, the Williamsburg butchers maker, amid a storm of low blows that all but incapacitated him and twice incurred him for counts in the eighth round. Berg, one time champion Sammy Mandell's most persistent lightweight challengers, weighed 139 1-4, Glick 137 1-2.

Seldom has a crowd in the big ballpark been spurred into such a spasm of rage and almost hysterical joy as the one last night by Glick's low smashes to the body and Berg's short belting to other the face. As the crowd roared him on, the hawk-faced Berg from Whitechapel rallied and battered Glick all over the ring. When Referee Joe Humphries announced that Berg had won the unanimous verdict of the judges and referee, he made one of the greatest orations the Garden ever has seen. Glick was almost torn from the arena by the cloudburst of boos.

But the kings of the controversies after the midget of the fight, and like Mandell Berg will not necessity of taking another that way in the eighth round. Glick smashed him to the floor with a left hook that was palpable foul and Berg was forced to take a count of seven. Just as the English champion reached his feet, Glick smashed him low again and Berg sank in distress.

RUTH'S BIG BAT WAS SILENCED

Brooklyn Robins Clout Out 4-1 Victory Over Braves

Macon, Ga., April 5.—Pitching that was first rate all the way and a spirited sixth inning battle rally which brought three runs, carried the Brooklyn Robins to another victory over the Boston Braves here yesterday. The score was 4 to 1.

Dazzy Vance and Jim Elliott were the Robin pitchers on yesterday's contest. Vance, who pitched the first five innings, demonstrated his famous wing is gradually approaching its proper form.' He allowed only three hits and two of them were rushed into the third stanza to produce the lone Brave tally.

In finishing the game, Elliott once again gave serious indication he is getting ready to stage a successful comeback. The southpaw yielded three hits while the scratches were all many innings. He never was in serious danger of being scored on.

Los Angeles, April 5—The Hornsbyless Chicago Cubs closed their training season here with Los Angeles with an 8-to-6 decision. Bob Osborn and Guy Bush Pirate Mirafer, Jr., pitched the National League champions, yielding 13 hits between them, while the Cubs obtained the same number from Ballou and Augie Walsh. Riggs Stephenson got his daily home run, and Hack Wilson also hit for the circuit.

Kansas City, Mo., April 5—Pitcher Sid Louis Browns swung their bats into real hitters yesterday and defeated Joplin 13 safe blows, but the Kansas City Blues pounded Rip Collins for six hits and six runs in the fourth inning and took the first game of the two-game series, 9 to 5. In snapping out of their hitting lethargy, all members of the Browns went into action. Ralph Miller made three hits in a row.

Bradenton, Fla., April 5—The Rochester Red Wings pounded Fred Frankhouse for seven hits and five runs in the last two innings yesterday afternoon but they fell one run short of a tie and the St. Louis Cardinals retained their third straight victory over the minor leaguers, 9 to 8. Bill Hallahan travelled the first six innings on the mound for the Cards and issued only one base on balls. Haffey started the Cardinals' scoring in the second inning with a home run.

Richmond, Va., April 5—The Philadelphia Athletics wound up their Spring exhibition tour here by losing to Reading of the International League, 7 to 3. Mahaffey, Athletics' hurler, was no puzzle to the minor leaguers, and some solid clouting by George Quellich, Reading left fielder, who had a pair of triples and a single, figured largely in the downfall of Connie Mack's men.

ESKIMO IGLOOS WARM AND COZY

Description of How They are Built by Only Two Men

Cambridge Bay, Victoria Island, April 5—Along the bo-bound northern shore of Canada live a race of men —the Eskimos—who have achieved a simplicity in architecture to rank with the most radical in history.

United by snow and there within the Arctic circle are snow-houses, called igloos, whose first designer must have been a man of rare genius.

Architecturally, the Eskimos can point to the igloo as an achievement, for virtually no other building is used by the dark-haired, dark-skinned wanderer of the north. Part of the year is passed in the tupek, or sealskin tent, but the shelter is abandoned as soon as frost and wind have rendered the snow hard enough to be cut into building-blocks.

But the igloo, hemispherical little snow-hut, is an oddity that borders on the marvelous. It is probably the only sturdy structure—unless, perhaps in Switzerland—that is constructed with a single tool from material available any where in the Arctic. The necessary implement is the snow-knife, about 15 inches long, and the material used is ordinary, every day northland snow.

Named sailors of the Eskimo, no doubt, occasioned the simplicity of construction of the cosy little dwelling places. Just two men are needed to build an igloo. From firm snow, windswept and frost-hardened, blocks are sliced with the snow-knife. The blocks measure about 1 1-2 feet in thickness and are 10 inches thick.

Foundaying for an igloo comprises laying a series of blocks, inclined slightly inward, in a 12-foot circle. By skilful use of snow-knife the blocks are fitted closely together. Then one of the constructors takes his place within the circle while his mate hands new blocks from the pile prepared nearby.

A second tier of blocks is placed, with great nicety, upon the foundation row sloping somewhat more inward than the first. Just as carefully, a third tier is laid, with still greater inward inclination; row after row is added until the igloo's roof takes gracefully curved builder's Head. Finally, only a small aperture at the top remains; into this is set the building horseshoe block, or wedge-shaped and edged gently into position.

Before the latter stages of the building have been finished, however, it is necessary for a hole to be cut in the side wall and base. Through this aperture are slid the blocks which make up the upper tiers of the igloo; for at this stage the structure is too high for the worker on the outside to hand the snow-blocks conveniently to his companion. A finished igloo dome is 8 to 10 feet high.

Inside the finishing-residence a snow-block floor of about 7 1-2 feet in thickness is laid. It covers the entire floor with the exception of that portion adjacent to the aperture in the side wall which is shaped in a semi-circle with about 3 feet high and two feet wide. A porch is constructed to shelter the door-way from the wind, and a small 3 inch-square window of sliced-down ice is set into it.

With this the architecture of the igloo is completed—and Mrs. Eskimo sets about furnishing the new apartment. She spreads willow mats on the snow floor, and places on them a bedding layer of deerskin. It is also the lady of the family who mounts on the dome of the igloo and plugs with small wedges of snow the interstices between the blocks. When white-oil lamps are flickering within and a square of snow is pulled up in the doorway, an igloo is a cosy spot even if winds are high and temperatures low.

N. S. SCHOONER HAD TOUGH TRIP

Halifax, N.S., April 5—Sixty-seven days out from La Vela de Coro and leaking badly as a result of a terrific battering by heavy seas which broke her rudder, the Halifax four-masted schooner Katherine was towed into Jacksonville Fla. according to information received by Mrs. Walter Mitchell, Halifax, wife of Capt. L. W. Veitch, master. All on board were reported well

The Kathrine May was last reported when spoken by the German steamer Floridus, which arrived provi'ons. The vessel was reported leaking badly with her rudder broken and was adrift off the Florida coast. A coast guard cutter from Fort Lauderdale was despatched to her assistance. Built at East Hampden, in 1918, the Kathrine May was formerly under United States registry. Two years ago the vessel underwent extensive repairs at Halifax and was purchased by Lindley of Hamilton, Bermuda. Last May the Katherine May docked a cargo of pulp at Pictihuoto for Wilmington Delaware.

BAD TEMPERED OWLS NIP PILOT'S HAND WHEN TAKING PLANE TRIP

Prefer Mice and Other Rodents to Human Flesh, However

(Canadian Press)

New York, April 5—It's owl in the way ye look at it, as Miller Dow'er would say. Out at Roosevelt Field (they called 'em "man-eating" owls, because they didn't like the uncomfortable tendency to take a bite out of any available human flesh. But Dr. W. Reid Bla'r, director of the Bronx Zoo said they merely needed a pair of bad-tempered owls, carnivorous as all owls are, but mainly interested in live mice and moles or possibly smaller birds to a human fidet.

The owls—seven, we're arrived at Roosevelt Field after a de luxe plane trip north from Washington. They were caught in Cuba, somewhere south of Havana, where ow'a, too, have their good times after dark. Mrs. Harrison Williams of New York and Aiken, S.C., and a guest on the estate of Charles A. Munn at Palm Beach, sent them as a gift to the New York Zoological Park. Mrs. Williams and several others started on the plane trip, but left to take a train at Jacksonville when bad weather set in.

The owls continued the trip as the only passengers (passengers is a, that), huddled in their orange crate, their temporary home. They are afraid of aviation and everything that was happening to them. Stunned ste-ds were of this resentment were Ray Barbin, pilot of the Roosevel's Field plane, and Harry Goldberg, assistant operations officer at Roosevelt Field who helped on the flight of the owls

The two pi'ots fed the owls raw meat once a day, and stowed them in a warm place at night and secretly resolved that if they came to worry them the darned owls would not rave a parachute On their arrival at Roosevelt Field after stopping over night at Hadley Field New Brunswick, because of thick weather, the crate was safely greeted by Cevan Williamson of the Zoo staff, who didn't crack a smile at the matter of concentrated grump ness a bit. He handed them knowingly, admitted amiably t- a little c'awing of his coat collar and beat it the newcomers off to the Bronx.

The veli of mys'ery that surrounded the owls ever since they started north that Saturday was dissipated by Dr. Bla'r's arrival. They are called, he Blair when he named them simply wid, smoky-faced owls. The Bahaman resemblance is marked, what w'th the white rim around the eye the ruffled compadour of feathers on the head and the beak is long and hooked, looking pretty menacing. They have big, brown eyes, whose stare is baeful and calculating. They are about eighteen inche- high.

Such owls said Dr B'air, are found in Cuba, Central America, and the south-western United States. S'milar specimens have visi'd the Bronx Zoo many owls. They are also

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE PROSPECTOR

by

Charles S. Reid

Copyright, 1929, International Features Service, Inc.

Dunsmartin was a small town, but it had a bank on a corner where two streets intersected; and the banker, Judson Means, was virtual dictator of the community. He directed affairs with a firm hand.

A stranger had reached town, a shabby genteel sort of fellow, about forty years old, meek in his manner, retiring in disposition, but with an eye which seemed to penetrate like that of an eagle. He lodged at the town's only hotel. The morning after his arrival he went over to the bank and deposited fifty dollars in foreign bills. Judson Means immediately invited him into the bank's private office, and to look over the morning paper which he found lying on the table.

The stranger's account was opened under the name of James Sanders. Sanders spent an hour with the paper, but he lost no part of the conversations which took place between officials of the bank and customers over the counters.

Sanders became a morning visitor to the bank. Judson Means was very sociable. He tried in every way to draw his customer out as to the latter's business in Dunsmartin. But Sanders's capacity for evasion was remarkable. The conversations which daily were had over the counter or the cashier's window were in a manner stereotyped. Overdue notes and mortgages were discussed, time was begged and in some instances granted, on receipt of small payments. Time was denied others with a firmness that amounted to brutality.

One morning a little old woman dressed in black, with a mourning bonnet on her head, came to the window.

"I can do nothing more," she declared.

"In that case, Mrs. Wilson, we shall have to take over the place, as the note has run quite long enough," said Banker Means himself who dealt the blow.

Mrs. Wilson drew a handkerchief with which she wiped her eyes as she turned away. It was with a decidedly more pronounced stoop that she slowly took her way from the building. Sanders arose, as Means came around from behind the railing.

"These widows and derelicts of one kind and another give me a pain," declared Banker Means.

"No doubt," agreed Sanders. "A banker's life must be a hard one?"

"I'll b'."

Sanders went out. Down the street was the figure of Mrs. Wilson making his way uncertainly along, it appeared to Sanders, who turned down the street in the same direction. He was led to the end of the street where a vacant lot of about eight acres lay. There was a small cottage on the lot, and it was at the door of the cottage that Sanders overtook the widow.

"Is this your place, lady?" he asked.

The furrowed face of the widow turned looked up. "It is—it was mine," she ventured. "But I reckon it will be Banker Means now."

"You owe the bank, under a mortgage?"

"Yes; three hundred dollars."

"Then the land is not very valuable here?"

"Ought to be worth fifty dollars an acre besides the house."

"I see. Well, I should like to have an option on the place for thirty days?"

The widow's face glowed. "I can try," she said.

"To not mention my name, which Sanders, or identify your prospect in any way to the banker. Just tell him you have found where you can raise twenty-five dollars, if he will extend the time. That will give him a payment, and he will figure that he can take over the place just as well in thirty days for that much less money But I think that he will have more money by that time."

Mrs. Wilson returned to the bank. Judson Means smiled cunningly at the proposition she offered, as he looked forward to the inevitable foreclosure. He prepared the necessary extension of time.

Now, something happened in Dunsmartin. Another stranger joined Sanders, and presently slender steel rods and pipes were being driven into the soil at various points on the Wilson lot.

A tall steel pole was erected near the center, which was carefully guyed to the ground. At the top of it were cross-arms at various angles, and these arms were terminated by strange points which gleamed sparklingly in the sunlight. Copper wires were brought down from the arms and into contact with one after another of the rods in the grounds. Presumed excitations were noted in memorandum books which Sanders and his partner carried.

Sanders no longer loafed around the bank—something important was going on in Dunsmartin. Citizens gath ered about the lot, curious and excited when nothing came of anyone's efforts to learn the nature of the experiments. Sanders and his partner, Sims, moved mysteriously and silently. No questions were answered.

Daily the crowd about the lot grew. People from the country round about came to watch the extraordinary proceedings. No one knew how radium originated, so some one whispered that signs of radium had been discovered. Another decided upon some other precious mineral or element.

Banker Means, with an excited greed, was checking off each day of the time expiring towards the end of the renewal period of Mrs. Wilson's note. No matter what was there he share of it.

was determined to have the lion's But Sanders remained deaf to every appeal of the banker in his efforts to get the inside of the mystery. At the end of a fortnight the rods and pipes were withdrawn from the ground, and everything was carried away from the premises.

Sanders and Sims disappeared. But they returned in a few days, with apparently plenty of money. They began buying ten-day options on the lands adjoining the Wilson Lot. Bank er Means was not long kept in ignorance of the movement. He became suddenly active, and started buying on his own account. Competition reached white heat in a day or two. Land owners tightened on their claims. Means threatened and cajoled.

Sanders and Sims quietly raised their offers one tire above another. Judson Means saw the greatest opportunity of this whole life slipping away from him. He spend the finer, and lost sleep at night. Every attempt to combine forces with Sanders had fail ed. He started bidding for making the extension on the Wilson note.

Each day now added to the frenzy of his greed. He revolved in his mind with a dozen pleas for defeating the purpose of Sanders to take over the mort gage. The price which Sanders had agreed to pay the widow was five thousand dollars. When this fact came out Banker Means grew weak in the knees, and he hurried home to mix a drink for himself.

When at last Sanders appeared at the bank, along with the widow, Mrs. Wilson, Means had reached a point of desperation. He invited Sanders into his private consulting room.

"What is it all about, Sanders?" he asked, f white circs ringing his lips.

"I am not at liberty to say," Sanders replied.

"Are you sufficiently capitalized?" was the banker's next question.

"Not personally, but we can find all we shall need."

"I am in position to finance a pretty good enterprise—on conditions."

"What conditions?"

Banker Means smiled. "Well, not exactly on a merely interest-bearing basis."

"On a dividend basis?"

"I see you get the point. I should be willing to come in on the proposition as a silent holder."

"But you are aware that there is no organization as yet?"

"I hardly thought there was. But this option—what are your terms for a half interest?"

Sanders was thoughtful. "You may come in for half interest in the option for ten thousand, cash, subject to the approval of Sims."

Sims approved two hours later; and the papers were drawn. Mrs. Wilson received her five thousand low the Sims set about perfecting the organization of her note; and Sanders and amount of the company. These details necessitated a trip to New York which Sanders and his partner undertook.

The following day Judson Means received a telegram which read:

"Sending important letter and papers by mail. Prompt attention requested.—Sanders."

TORONTO SQUAD TREKKING NORTH

Steve O'Neill well Satisfied With Leafs' Prospects This Year

Tarpon Springs, Fla., April 4—Mild excitement prevailed in the Leafs' camp after Manager Steve O'Neill had announced that his squad would take today's workout in two shifts, at 10 o'clock and at 1.30.

Most of the hub was raised over the outfield selections for the first lot, which included all the known regulars, Art Ruble, Joe Harris, Art McHenry and Bob Petrie were the outfielders rearned to practice at ten o'clock, while Clayt Sheedy, Sad Sam Rabbitt were placed in the second list at 1.30 o'clock.

Fred Bedore, Nick Harrison, Walter Lerner and Eddie Phillips also were included in the 1.30 lot, all of which the exception of McHenry none has shown much stick work, at least they didn't in the games played and even Art Ruble, who batted .376 in the American Association last season, has not been hitting the ball as he should. Clayt Sheedy and Joe Rabbitt also fell down in the games they played and Bob Petrie experienced trouble driving the ball out of the infield.

The veteran Joe Harris has been meeting the ball harder than any of the outfield candidates, but only in batting practice. Not having taken part in a game, he is going to be slowcoming around and the Leafs' boss is not certain whether he ever will, Harris underwent an operation during the Winter and has not yet recovered his strength. If he can only become considerable punch will be added to the team. Harris hit .342 in the coast league in 1929.

About Fred Bedore, the Chicago boy has about clinched the utility infield place. Bedore's work so far this spring has satisfied O'Neill in every way, while Nick Harrison will be one of the nine pitchers retained. Jay Cantrell, Sam Gibson, Frank Prudhomme and Charley Fisher also are sure of pitching employment with the Leafs.

Four to be Released

That leaves Walter Lerner, Albert Phillips, Phil Lehrer, John Ahlbert, Big Vick, John Niggeling and Bill Gwathmey from whom to select the other two roundmen, as Manager O'Neill ambitioned tonight that Niggeling, Gwathmey, Vick and Lehrer would not be retained. Niggeling are sure of fact will be left at Evansville next week. The others will be shifted during the l.p north.

OCEAN RICHES NOT EXPLORED

Beneficent Role of Great Water Described by Maritime Biologist

Toronto, Ont., April 5—All things come from the sea and without the great waters human life could not continue for a day. This point was strongly brought out as a lecture recently given before the Royal Canadian Society by Prof. A. G. Huntsman, director of the Atlantic Biological Station at St. Andrews, N. B.

The ocean's reservoir of heat keeps the earth's surface at a temperature suitable to life, said the speaker. The ocean is called upon by the moisture-seeking rays of the sun to feed the clouds and the clouds water the crops, provide drink for beast and man, turn the great wheels of power plants and perform the everlasting service of keeping the air moist.

The world has little conception of the riches sheltered in the depth of the sea which Professor Huntsman likened to the inexhaustible gems of Portunalus—inexhaustible and constantly replenished. Man used to regard the ocean as a terror and a "waste," fearful to drop over its edges, yet today he has brought the waves under his control and uses the broad ocean highways for cheap transportation throughout the world.

The ocean's surface is 70 per cent of the earth's surface and its volume is calculated at 300,000,000 cubic miles. It could cover the entire earth to a depth of more than a mile and a half, if spread over the globe. The ocean is far from a dead, inert mass. It is living, always in circulation, replenishing its stores and defying exhaustion, even though it is the richest.

Thousands of millions of tons of gold and silver are scattered through out the waters, remarked the professor, and yet these cannot, so far, be extracted profitably for the miners are not in the form of nuggets or flakes but are dissolved in the water. Nickel, copper and zinc are also known to be present in the sea. So it is often true that when one scoops up a little sea water in the hand there is gold there but in this case, of course, is such infinitesimal quantity that it could not be measured by any human device.

The sea is the main source of common salt and its weeds, particularly, is to be found in iodine, a necessary element to drinking water and an element which can be, and is, extracted. The biological station director gave an account of the fisheries of the Maritime provinces and cited the herring as an outstanding example of a fish whose numbers can least be limited by man's effort. On the coast of southern New Brunswick, the herring are taken while still very young and in enormous quantities yet there seems to be not the slightest dwindling of the supply. Even the throwing open of the spawning grounds to fishermen has been without observable ill effects. The herring is able to use as food a variety of small floating stuff and in certain regions can reproduce its kind with invariable and overwhelming success. All regions of the sea, however, are not equally able to produce and renew large stocks of fish. Oysters, for instance, need several years to grow.

Elko, Nev., man paid $5 for an auto, he admitted, and found $2.80 under the seat.

Russia imported American farm machinery worth $30,121,429 last year.

SHIP NEWSMAN HAS INTERVIEWS OF VARIED, INTERESTING NATURE

Ambassador, Motor Magnate and Singer Example of Day's Work

New York, April 5—Smooth and slow through a thick fog and the gabbling dusk the great ship slid to anchor in midstream, at the entrance to New York Harbor. The sharp hoarse roar of the chain tearing out of the hawse holes, tinkling of bells came across the water where waited on the Customs Cutter the ship news reporters and the cameramen with tripods and flashlight paraphernalia. The Aquitania's lay, a long sharp bulk of shadow her belly studded with amber and ember lights, while half a dozen tugs bucked and strove at her sides.

The reporters were impatient. After a lengthy wait in the lounge of the Manhattan's lower tip the cutter had parted from off presumably for the Aquitania at one o'clock in the afternoon. She headed at a good rate, for Hamilton Cut and Manhattan and there she lay until seven in the evening. The Italian ambassador and the 1870 collar kept walking about the deck muttering below his breath. He was going out to interview Galli Curci who had just returned from a European cruise in Europe. Nobody had much to eat. The photographers amused themselves with school boys running about and playing practical jokes on each other. The early view of Manhattan's sky-line in bright misty weather faded from the minds of the special reporters as their interiors became void. Then about seven the ship moved down to interview Sir Ronald Lindsay, the new British Ambassador to Washington, had brought the tedium towers grand. But that was half a day ago. The Aquitania was 18 hours late because of the fog.

When they got aboard they learned it had thickened up again inside and steward told one of the Americans the Cunarder would anchor for the night rather than run the risk of crashing her bulk through a ferry boat.

Consciously or unconsciously the reporter used English slang in repying. "You're spoofing me."

TALLEST DIPLOMAT

"No kidding," said the steward diplomatically.

Sir Ronald obviously enjoyed his interview. He was asked innumerable questions about politics, the economic situation, prohibition, his family, his sports. One of the reporters said to the Ambassador, "well, Sir Ronald, Sir Esme Howard may have been dean of the diplomatic corps, but you will certainly be the tallest diplomatist in Washington." Sir Ronald is six feet four inches tall.

"Yes sir, but if you did belong to a party what party would you belong to?"

Sir Ronald laughed at the jocular insistence and then said, "I think I should be in England what we call a crossbencher." He explained—drawing lines on the table-cloth with his finger to show how the benches were set in Parliament.

The reporters figured Sir Charles Marsden who had some interest in an English motor company—was going down to Dayton Beach to see Kaye Don race his "Silver Bullet."

JERICHO EXCAVATIONS

"I thought you were going to ask me about excavation in Jericho," Sir Charles said. He talked for a while about motors—and expressed admiration for the way the Americans "pushed their good name abroad" in business. Then he talked about Jericho and how by digging under the falling walls the excavators had discovered crockery which proved the Philistines had not been in the neighborhood until after the disaster. He attributed the fallen walls to an earthquake.

It began to look as though the newspapermen would have to stay aboard all night.

Galli-Curci's manager was anxious to explain about Madame's illness in Europe and the uproar occasioned by the report that she was ill-received.

The reporters and photographers milled around through the ship. Somebody tried to get a game of cards going. Than a tray provided by the company dropped out of the fog and hugging hooks and pencil and camera everybody scrambled a dozen feet up the ladder to the swaying deck. On the way home the uneasy ones stayed on deck in a thick reek listening to a thousand hooting roars, the jangle of warning bells, and the unseen strains of "Just Break the News Mother" mounting through the ventilator from the cabin.

Eleven o'clock and all's well as the Battery, the subway, the office, the story—the life of a ship news reporter in his 12 hour day.

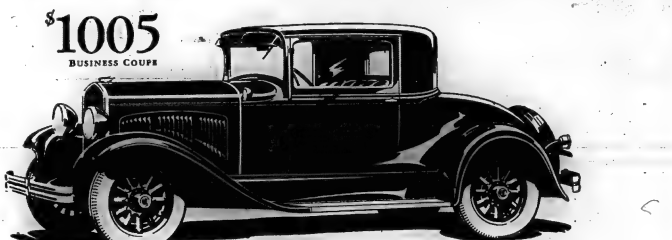
GIRLS SHOULD MARRY WHEN YET YOUTHFUL

London, April 5—"It is always a matter of surprise to me that people should ever regard cooking and home work as degrading, while they consider typing and looking after a man's letters as ennobling," declared Miss Charlotte Cowdray, principal of the Crouch End High School.

"Girls are meant to marry—there is no getting away from the fact. So many women have told me how they bitterly regret not having married when they were young and had the chance.

"The pity of it is many a modern girl does not realize this when she is young and having a good time. Her dance partners earn as much, and in some instances more than her young men friends. This makes the young men diffident about asking such independent young girls to marry them, and if they do ask, the girls do not like the idea of giving up their own good salaries to those of the man.

"I think modern mothers are largely to blame. I have known some who have deliberately broken off their daughters' engagements because they thought their daughters would not be able to enjoy life as much on their fiance's salaries."



Miss Cowdray believes that "all this cry about surplus women is very much over-rated." In her opinion there is a real dearth of marriageable girls. Young men are in want of girls who would pull their weight in the marriage-boat. They do not want mere

Girl Unafraid

The Tragedy of a Woman Who Defied Convention in the Name of Love

By Gladys Johnson

They were in the cabin with the others. Ken was ripping the envelope of a telegram.

He looked up, his face ashen. "It's from the doctor. Mother's very ill. I'll have to go."

A sense of disaster crashing in on Ardeth. Pool of ingrown the true import of the message escaped her. It seemed like a dramatic party to Ken's less words to her. He spoke of marriage and was immediately snatched away.

Then her relief went out in a warm gush of pity. He looked so white, so stunned. His duties was nothing she could do. He did not need her.

While Ken hastily changed into oilskins clothes—while Tom drove his car up to the road to be in readiness — she could only stand, feeling her heart shaken by a sense of fear. Hearing the excited, repressed voices of the others.

Ken came running downstairs in hat and overcoat. His eyes went as Slashby over her as they did over the others. He answered Mary's questions mechanically, in answer to be off.

He refused Tom's offer to go along. brusquely. He'd be all right. He didn't need anyone.

Hendligh's danced on the snow — then the roar of his motor, quickly dying out. He was gone. And the little group in the cabin seemed oddly forlorn.

"Poor Ken." murmured Mary. "It is the end. It will go hard with Ken. He's devoted to his mother."

Was it her fancy, thought Ardeth, or did Mary's gaze brush her consciously for a moment as she spoke.

Later that night, when she lay awake on the narrow cot which had been prepared for her, Ardeth found herself reviewing that moment of slinking heart. Why should Mary pity her? Suppose Ken were hopelessly— Suppose Ken's mother . . . Oh, no, never think of that! Never dare to draw her own happiness through Ken's sorrow.

Wide eyes fastened on the low bright stars looking in the windows, she tried to follow Ken in fancy on his lonely ride. Plunging down the black mountains . . . Did he feel this great shining love she felt for him? Dig it bring him comfort?

Hours later Ken reached the end of his journey's end and stood, weary, dry, drenched in rain. Heavy, sluggish drops, like teary tears . . .

Like a nightmare dream as he reached the anteroom he entered to see his mother. As he fitted the key in the lock, the door opened. He had expected a nurse . . . the doctor, perhaps. Something of a small shock to see Cecile Parker before him. Cecile, in a soft, grey-blue chiffon thing which made her pale oval of face and the Naples yellow waves of her hair soft and appealing. Gone the orange lipstick. The suave eye encouraging whisper, bringing the color to the man's face. "She's asleep . . . Best thing that could happen. Here—sit here. If she wakes and finds you here it's better than medicine."

Hours tiered away by the little china clock on the bureau. Hours when the man sat unstirring in the chair, his brown head warm over the wrinkled one on the bed.

All the world receded, leaving only this lighted room, this island of misery floating in a sea of chaos.

Now and then he was aware of others flexting into his range of vision. The stout dark figure of the doctor, Cecile, slender and lovely as she stole noiselessly in to tuck a cushion behind his back.

The long visit became a nightmare. At first his thoughts clustered exultantly about that frail old figure on the bed. Then, at the first sharp edge of anxiety dulled by hour after hour passed in shallow breathing and no change came over the grey withered face on the pillow. Ken's tired mind became vague—dreamy.

The drive down the mountains after a day of vigorous exercise had left him worn out. That day . . . was it possible that it was only a few short hours ago that he had been up in Tom's mountain cabin, laughing, joking with Mary and Fred and Phyllis? Talking with Ardeth. Ardeth . . .

Unconsciously he shook his head and closed his eyes as though to shut away the image of her face. The thought of Ardeth did not belong here in this room where his mother battled death. She stirred, moaned, and Ken was instantly alert. Shot with disturbing dreams. He was driving like a fiend—hurtling down steep black roads like a falling comet. Ardeth was clinging to him and crying . . .

He rose with a guilty start. Leaned forward, holding his breath.

No change. The face against the pillow as worn—as small. The satin quilt lifting so shallowly over the shrunken chest.

To the nurse's whispered suggestion that he also was dying at one rest he vigorously shook his head. But upright. Blinking weary at the bed.

The night lifted. The sky outside the window became a hard cold blue. The bleak light of morning crept in at the end of the night light.

As though it called to her, his mother opened her eyes. Her voice, a mere whisper than it had been last night brought his anxious face leaning over her.

"Cecile . . ." she whispered. "I want both my children—with me . . . "

Ken suddenly became aware of Cecile standing close beside him.

His mother managed a faint smile as Ken took it. A pang at Ken's heart.

He had the feeling of a fact closing down about him.

In the first three days after her return to the city Ardeth had no word from Ken. What message news she could glean from Jeanne did little to relieve her mind. Mrs. Gleason was close to death Cecile was constantly at the apartment.

She tried to reason her fear away. Of course she could not expect Ken's attention at a time like this! She must not be petty.

As night she was afraid to leave her locked room lest Ken should call her on the phone and miss her. She snatched a hasty dinner on her way up from the shop, and spent the long nights in her little attic perched high above the city, waiting for the telephone to ring.

The Voice Was Ken's

She could not read, much less settle down to sewing. Impossible now to work on those precious pink things which were to deck her trousseau.

She spent the hours pacing the small room. Five strides brought her to the window . . . For the most part she sat looking out over the dark roofs to where the uplifting lights of downtown painted the low-hanging clouds ruddy.

The Christmas rush in the stores was far remote—almost strange. Was it? It should be near Christmas. There was no holiday—no joy. Only the long hours were swept away by this strain of waiting.

Eleven-thirty. Silly to wait up any longer. He would not phone tonight. Slowly she prepared for bed, her hands lifeless, her heart heavy.

She was awakened out of troubled dreams by the shrill peal of the phone.

She was clinging to the transmitter, speaking nervously, without any recollection of getting there.

Ken's voice coming over the wire—such a strange, unfamiliar voice.

"I have to see you, Ardeth. Just have time for a few minutes. Only that. Will you meet me downstairs if I drive around to the hotel?"

"In fifteen minutes," she promised.

She hung up. Snapped on the lamp. Two-thirty. Her heart leaped. What could have caused Ken to call at such an hour?

Suddenly she began to shake with a nervous chill, her teeth chattering, hands so cold and clumsy that she had trouble putting on her clothes. She slipped into her heavy coat. Pulled her hat on, regardless. Across the room her own figure moved in the depths of the mirror; a glimpse of a white face and wide eyes as she let herself out of the door.

She waited at the creak of the automatic elevator as she pressed the button. A strange, frightful time it to be going out!

Tragedy Casts Its Shadow

The street before the hotel was cold and deserted. Ardeth huddled in the doorway until Ken's car shot around the corner.

He did not greet her. Nor did she set one. Just looked at her and opened the door, barely waiting until she slipped into the seat beside him before he started the motor again.

The city's arms clung to him in alarm as the car darted recklessly by. A bleak change had come over Ken in the last few days. The whole outline of his face had sharpened and something of gallant youth had been wiped away.

She was tremendously aware of something tragic lying between them. Aware—and afraid. Don't speak . . . words would bring it out of the shadows. Words would make it disaster.

She put out a hand and touched the sleeve of his overcoat as though to convince herself of his nearness. Because it is so helpful in keeping diseases, babies and children healthy and happy, every mother should know about Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

MOTHERS now learn popular use of MAGNESIA

This harmless, almost tasteless preparation is most effective in relieving those symptoms of babies and children generally caused by souring food in the little digestive tract, such as sour-sickening, frequent vomiting, fever and gas. Also as a mild laxative it acts gently but certainly to open the little bowels in constipation colds children's Phillips Milk of Magnesia. Doctors have prescribed it for over 50 years.

Without taking his eyes from the street ahead, Ken snatched that hand and held it against his lips for a moment.

"Ardeth. Now—"

"Not here. We can't talk now. I want to look at you." He steered past, striking into a turn.

"But—your mother—

She's still alive."

Silence.

She could only wait, anxious eyes devouring his set profile.

A small, dark park suddenly loomed in their path. Ken swung the machine to the curb. The headlights gleamed on glossy shrubs, seeming a theatrical setting for the glare. Then blackness rushed about them as he stopped the engine and snapping off the lights. The watching girl could barely make out his face by the dim glare of an arc light some distance away.

"Well . . ." he turned to her, speak. It's still in that new light, now, "now we can talk. But we mustn't take long; I had to leave Jeanne alone. To tell you—I'm going to marry Cecile."

She sat as still as some small, stunned animal.

Then, with his breath in a whistling sigh, "Tomorrow—at 5, in St. Matthew's Church. The church my mother was married in." He was painfully precise.

"Oh." Then, sharply as the news sunk in. "Oh!"

She was crying in his arms, her face pressed hard against the rough weave on his overcoat. Dreadful tears, torn out of her heart. Scalding tears.

"Don't, sweetheart . . . Ken, don't . . ." His funky voice came smothered against his hair. He had pressed her face down on her head.

Maidens bursting in her brain like a flash of red light. She had snatched his face down in an agony of passion. Her words came fiercely smothered against his lips.

"My Life to Live"

"No. You can't! You're mine . . . Mine . . . Mine . . .

Sweetheart, listen—" Gently he thrust her away. Holding her hands down in his own, his face set and white. Still he spoke in that tense, unnatural voice.

"My mother is dying." He gulped. "She loves me. She can't stand anything. This; I marry Cecile. What can I say?"

No answer but her lorn sobs.

After a moment he burst out.

"Don't you suppose I love you over this and over it—till today—all today? I'm going mad. I think I'll love you up—and I love you! God, I love you, Ardeth. It's wicked to marry one girl loving you the way I do—she is little—and all. And lying there—dying!" His voice was stortured. "If I only could. But even when I said I would. She tried to smile . . .

"Oh, it's wrong!" rose her muffled wail. "No one can live another person's life!"

STUDYING EVOLUTION AT VERY FIRST HAND

NEW YORK, April 5—Sleepy progeny of the Devonian hog-fish of 400 million years ago is under laboratory treatment today, affording science an opportunity to study evolution at first hand. These relatives of the Devonian creatures which were the first to walk on dry land are the most ancient survivors—except the sharks—in the long cycles of evolution, and stand as live specimens at the dawn.

They are African lung-fish under observation at Bellevue Medical College of New York University. One specimen lives in the water in a glass bowl where it was placed four months ago after being removed from a lump of dry mud, about as hard as a rock. It had been in this mud six thirteen months. There are fifteen others in hard mud on the laboratory shelf.

These creatures of ancient piety color, a look or so long, and looking like a cross between a catfish and an eel have been there buried after the specimen months. They live on water and rise to the surface once in about fifteen minutes to breathe. In the dry season they bury themselves, breathing through a hole in the earth.

Dr. Smith estimates they can live in the mud five years. They do not eat while in mud, but live on their own tissue that accumulate waste products in their own bodies. No one understands why they can so dispose of wastes.

Dr. Smith is studying secrets of nature's laboratory functions which no other animals seem to possess. These functions appear to have some relation to the lung-fish's ability to live in a state of suspended animation. The fish curl up in the mud. The sleep which follows has been compared to hypnosis caused by maintaining an unchanged posture, and it seems to be a nervous function.

Psychology claims child of an emotional scientist has a probable value to the world of $100,00.

Dock Attendant Drags Man to Safety Before Boat Is Consumed

(Canadian Press)

Windsor, Ont., April 4—Another victim, of warfare on the Detroit river front was fighting for life today. A flaming speedboat with no one at its helm crashed against the liquor export dock at Ojibwe, Ont., about midnight last night. A huge human form was hanging over the side. The attendant at the dock dragged the man to safety before the fire consumed his craft. At the hospital here the man was identified as Steve Jurecke of Windsor, Detroit suburb. His face was partly shot away and a bullet had passed through his shoulder. After an operation early today physicians said he might recover. No a gun of liquor were found in the boat. This led the police to believe Jurecke was returning to Canada after delivering a cargo to the Al'chigan side of the river, when shooting took p'ace. Officers of the United States customs border patrol at Detroit said today that no federal agents had been firing any shots on the river last night.

Restless Children

Children will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always one sure way to comfort a restless, fretful child. Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than some powerful medicine that is meant for the stronger systems of adults.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is need. For colds, colic, diarrhea, or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. But it has the very best of mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any fret upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed to set everything to rights. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

CHANNEL TUNNEL SCHEME AGAIN IS TO BE CONSIDERED

Committee Studying Great Engineering Project After Reports of Legislators

London, April 5—Although the Parliamentary Committee on the channel tunnel has reported (with certain reservations favorably upon the prospect we are probably still very far from any definite move being made towards the realization of the world's high century-old project. The Committee appointed by Mr. Baldwin, of which the Chairman was E. L. Pescock, the noted financier, has as many associations with Canada was merely called upon to consider economic questions attaching to the proposal. It now remains for the Committee of Imperial Defence to examine the matter and to deliver their opinion on what dangers may exist from a military viewpoint.

Most of the great military strategists of this and the previous generation was utterly opposed to the making of a channel tunnel. Wolseley, French and Haig were all against it. Wolseley's objections were first that it was sufficiently powerful could land sufficiently from the sea on a dark night and take command of the tunnel entrance. His second objection was based on political inconsistencies and delays. He felt that in the event of a grave crisis arising, the tunnel might be rushed before the Government made up minds to let it be used. The entrance of the British side would be left open too long; Government hesitation, vacillating between national safety and the desirability of an immensely valuable commercial enterprise, would not want to take the step of destroying the tunnel.

Probably objections like the foregoing might not carry the same weight today as formerly. It is not held by competent military authorities at the present time that a channel tunnel would play any conspicuous part in future war. It might indeed, be of much use, but strategists and army commander would care to have his range of action confined to any one tunnel, or any one railway line.

It light really be asked what a system of anti-aircraft defence for the mouth of the tunnel would certainly be made a primary objective of hostile aircraft.

Although Lord Ebbisham, a member of the Parliamentary Committee, suggested the report he added a qualifying minute. "My general conclusion," he states, "is that even if a tunnel could be built, maintained and operated by private enterprise, and if it could carry traffic at competitive rates, the resultant advantages are uncertain, and, at the best, slight in extent. Whilst, on the other hand, evidence submitted has shown that there would be definite detriment to substantial portions of established industries, such, for instance, as shipping and agriculture."

Sir Herbert Walker, General Manager of the Southern Railway, in look ing at the national point of view, is in accord with Lord Ebbisham's conclusions, although he is of the opinion that in the long run the tunnel would benefit the railway of which he is the head. "I think," says Sir Herbert, that the tunnel will take more money out of this country than it will ever bring into it. I am, moreover, unable to agree with the Committee's estimate of the number of passengers who would be likely to make use of the tunnel. Finally, I doubt whether the report of the Committee has in any way advanced the cause of the channel tunnel."

Against this is the statement of Field-Marshall Foch, spoken at a gathering of the Comite Interalliee, Paris in 1922: "If the channel tunnel had been built it might have prevented the war, and in any event it would have shortened it by one half year."

The French Channel Tunnel company has a concession from their government and can resume work at any moment, but the English channel tunnel company can do nothing without an act of parliament.

The tunnel scheme cannot be killed. It is unquestionably the greatest engineering proposal before the world.

The estimate time for the work is five or six years. A "pilot" and drain age tunnel of small diameter would first be laid down costing about £35,000,000. Then the main tunnels, side by side, each carrying one way rail traffic, would be built at a cost of about $10,000,000.

The traffic would be carried on electric trains and there is a proposal to build a special Continental Terminus in London for tunnel traffic only. From this terminal electric trains would run to the coast and through the tunnel to a corresponding French terminus. The largest continental expresses with sleeping and restaurant cars could come through to England. The continental trains would use the special line to London from the tunnel.

The total length of the tunnel would be 31 miles, under the plans which have been laid down. The English end would be behind the Shakespeare cliffs between Dover and Folkestone, the French end between Boulogne and Calais near Wimereux. The train time would be about three quarters of an hour and the journey could be examined in trains, cutting an hour and a half off the journey to Paris.

Gillette

Once you try the

New Gillette Blade and Razor $1.00 you'll throw away your old razor

QUICK FACTS

1. New blade can be used in your old Gillette
2. New processed steel; new blade resists rust
3. Cut-out corners of blade prevent "razor pull"
4. To clean, turn guard at right angles . . . then re-tighten . . . rinse . . . shake dry
5. New shape guard channel gives full shaving clearance
6. New shape guard tooth meet shins smoothly, naturally
7. No protecting posts to dull blade edge
8. Reinforced razor corners prevent damage if dropped
9. Square blade ends safer to handle
10. Shaves easier around mouth, nose, ears
11. New blades same price as old
12. New razor, gold-plated, with one new blade, in case, $1.00

Even if you should manage to dent this extra thickness of metal, you still won't throw the blade out of alignment. Why? Because all four corners of the new blade are cut out. The blade is under no pressure at the corners when cap and guard clamp together.

Now when you're through shaving, all you do is shift guard at right angles, re-tighten and rinse under hot running water. The blade is especially protected to resist rust. Just dry thoroughly and place on shelf.

The position posts, too — which accidentally nicked more than one good blade edge—are gone. The ends of the blade are squared off for safer handling with wet fingers and for closer shaving around the difficult corners of mouth, nose and ears.

Visit your Gillette dealer tomorrow. We are making every effort to fill the heavy demands for the new razor, but if you cannot get one at once, you can use the new blade in your old Gillette for the time being.

TRAFFIC SLOWED BY FOND KISSES

Says Wives Must Think They Will Never See Hubbies Again

(Canadian Press)

Westfield, N.J., April 5—Patrolman John Shiffer a jovial young member of the War'rd col on force, is somewhat upset over the prolonged demonstrations of public affection exhibited at the Central Railroad of New Jersey station every morning by the citizens of this town. Some departing husbands Shiffer has observed linger on the station driveway kissing their wives three and four times before dashing for the trains for New York.

Such a practice has become a habit and, the all ha'ls he said it grows stead ily worse. Already the kissing rack'em contin ues a civic menace. It delays traffic dreadfully at the most crucial hour of the day.

"If their men folks were leaving them for Havana or for some other place, like Burma, I'd say OK to the ladies," Patrolman Shiffer explained. "But the trains are short. That's the difference. They're just going only to New York and once they've got all the kissing done, it's all to be done over when the regi mentors. Just watch them now. In the automo'le line man klaws a wife and two kids and with another in there. What a thrill I say.

"Now if there is anything on that is particular, if they would only let me know. I could find a parking space not here though. There's plenty of room to step down by the freight shed but, no sir, they must stage their kissing out here in the driveway right in front of the station.

"I've got my regular every day customers trained pretty well. Some of them have it down to a science now. The husband drops out of the car, the wife switches over to the wheel, and the kissing is over like clockwork. It's not them that cause the trouble. It's the rainy day people, the ones who walk down on c'ear days and only ride to the station in the wet weather."

BLOOD TRANSFUSION AS MEASLES CURE

NEW YORK, April 5—(by the Canadian Press) — The inoculation of a child with the blood of one of the parents is a simple preventive that will ward off the danger of a severe attack of measles, Major Edward J. Abbott, M. D., said in a radio talk delivered under the auspices of the Health Department.

The injection will be valueless unless made within five days after exposure to the disease, Major Abbott said. A small amount of blood is drawn from one of the parents who has had the measles and transferred to the child in an intramuscular injection. One ounce will give sufficient protection. The child may not escape the disease, but will have it only in a mild form.

"Almost no fever, scanty rash and complete lack of the usual aching and constitutional symptoms may be expected," Major Abbott said. "Above all, the pneumonia, which often follows the measles with fatal consequences, will be warded off. A dose of double the size gives complete but temporary immunity. The smaller injection is preferred because it permits the child to develop an immunity that lasts the rest of his life."

ELECTRONS DANCE, MUSIC CAPERING

New York, April 5—Now a we made to turn concerts, excerpts from grand'ras and otherwise perform in an extraordinary manner by Dr. A. N. Goldsmith, vice president and general engineer of the Rad o Corporation of Amer ica, during an address on "The Industrial March of the Electron," given before the members of the Electrical Associat on of New York.

The music vibrations, transformed into "electrical vibrations, then into light by means of a neon tube, were made to leap through space on the beam of 1-65th flow through a glass tube and a fine slit mirror and hence objects before falling on a photoelectric cell again being converted into electrical energy, amplified and reproduced is music.

Dr. Goldsmith struck a match before the sensitive electric eye and the amputter of the exciting phosphorus corroded like a miniature machine gun. A Fourth of July sparkler caused similar but sustained crackling sounds. Such as are heard when the radio set is operated during severe static storms.

Dr. Goldsmith read a sermon being the study of the electron and proton, the elementary particles of positive charges and the smallest things in the universe in the new wave science or pathway in the fa ry and of science. He predicted that radio musical instruments, such as the instrument which is played by waving the hands, will be in use not long in the future tone co'or never before heard will be produced, and radio of a whole new family of musical instruments made possible by applications of the electron tube. Any pitch, volume, one or type of control become a possibility with the vacuum tube, he said.

83 YEARS OLD

Montreal, April 3 (CP).—Reference by a witness to a woman of 53 as "an old woman" aroused the ire of a magistrate in Highgate Court, England, who declared the remark was disgraceful. The protest, which indicates that the magistrate himself has reached years of discretion, and that the offender was very young, will meet with general approval, especially in feminine circles, says the Gazette in an editorial. There are women of seventy more years than 53 who, in the words of Gilbert, "might very well pass for 53" in the dusk with a light behind them." A woman should be regarded as being as young as she thinks.

LONE WORSHIPPER IN MEETING PLACE

(Canadian Press)

Bloomsburg, Pa., April 5.—At Mary Anna Waver, ninety-six, who for the past twenty-five years worshipped alone in the Friends' Meeting House in Catawissa is dead. Miss Waller was the last member of the congregation at the Friends' Meeting House. In 1903 all the other members had died or had moved from the district. Each Wednesday and each Sunday she went to the little log building and sat for half an hour in silence, according to the ritual of her faith. She lived alone in a small house.

The church was erected in 1775 and is a historical landmark. Miss Waller, the daughter of a well-to-do land owner, came to Catawissa in 1901, and restored the building, which had not been used for many years and was falling into decay. The years ago the Catawissa Borough Council took over maintenance of the meeting house. The original furniture remains.

Mysterious Craft's Wreckage Drifts Down Upper Niagara River

Firing Heard At Dawn At Fort Erie, Press Is Told

(Canadian Press)

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., April 7.—Wreckage of a thirty foot cabin cruiser drifted down the Upper Niagara River today and it is possible that the bodies of the crew have been taken over the falls. A railway motorman saw a craft coming down the river with the cabin tower apparently shot away. No report has been filed at any of the police headquarters or the United States coast guard station. Coastguardsmen told the Canadian Press that they had been in contact with rum-runners for several days, and that no firing had been done by them today. At Fort Erie, it was reported firing was heard just before dawn. When first sighted, there was apparently no one aboard the craft, which was carried down the river in a sinking condition and smashed to pieces just above the falls. No name could be seen. The craft was painted white with green stripes.

Expect 7 Tenders For Moira R. Bridge

Tenders for the projected bridge across the Moira River on Bridge Street for which plans were accepted some weeks ago will all be in by tomorrow and in the evening the city council will hold a special meeting to deal with this question as well as the filter plans, which have arrived at the city hall.

The number of tenders on the bridge is expected to be at least seven so that the council will have the advantage of a good selection. In the call for tenders the contracting companies were invited to tender on not only reinforced concrete but also steel construction.

The bridge issue is becoming much the topic of discussion on Front Street especially in that portion which is south of Bridge Street as the contemplated construction will take considerable time during which the bridge will be under the builders and traffic will have to be routed via the upper bridge and the heavier traffic probably by the boundary bridge on College street.

There is some agitation that the bridge work should not be started until the tourist season is past its height, that is in the latter part of August. Against this view is the statement of engineers that September is a frost month, and the fact that the fair traffic would be hampered at that late date.

WIDOW RETURNS TO WOODSTOCK FROM LEWISTON

Denies Marriage With A. E. Chandler of That Place

SOME ANXIETY

Woman's Disappearance Had Caused Fears of Foul Play

(Canadian Press)

WOODSTOCK, Ont., April 7.—Mrs. Cora Lightheart, 51-year-old widow, who was reported in despatches from Lewiston, Maine to be missing, returned to her home in Beachville, near here Sunday from Maine said it was feared that the woman had been murdered. Mrs. Lightheart denies she married Avery E. Chandler of Lewiston, as also stated in a despatch from that town. Lewiston police reported Mrs. Lightheart had more than five hundred dollars in cash and drafts with her, in addition to considerable jewellery and her sudden departure led to reports of foul play.

(Lewiston Despatch)

Lewiston, Maine, April 7 (CP).—Adjutant Avery E. Chandler, of the Salvation Army, said today that he married a woman by the name her name as Mrs. Cora Lightheart, of Beachville, Ont., and Avery Chandler, Salvation Army counter, in Auburn, adjoining this city a week ago today. Former Lieut. Chandler had marriage license issued by the Auburn city clerk and although he knew neither of the parties he performed the ceremony immediately after the Sunday street service. Five days after the marriage Chandler was reported to the county authorities that his wife was missing. Later he said he received a letter from his wife said that she intended to "just fade out of his life."

Farmer said he tyried copies of the marriage license with local city clerks in both Lewiston and Auburn.

AGED MARITIME PRINTER PASSES

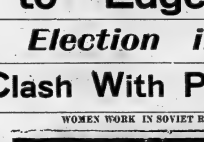
Veteran of the Old Publishing School Succumbs To Illness

Halifax, April 7—Charles O. Blackader, veteran publisher and editor of the Acadian Recorder, the only hamiet daily paper of the Canadian Maritime provinces, died here last night after an illness of four months. He was 82 years old.

He founded the Recorder, which had been in the possession of his family since 1833, in 1880 and published one large blanket sheet. He refused to install modern machinery, claiming it would make too many men temporarily out of work. He read every line of proof every day himself and personally checked on the accuracy of the names and initials of every person mentioned in the paper. He contributed also a weekly article on the history of Nova Scotia before he started by his father, religiously to the last.

Before Confederation he opposed the union with Canada and was conspicuous his opposition. Dominion Day was always a holiday for the Recorder employees, but they celebrated June 21, the natal day of Halifax, instead.

He received honors from local and federal Houses and also declined a knighthood in 1902 and the leadership of Nova Scotia



Every morning of his life he rose at six o'clock, personally called for the mail at the post office at seven and went directly to his office.

MOTORCAR DAMAGED FROM REAR SATURDAY

Late Saturday afternoon a slight accident occurred at the corner of Bridge and Front Street. Burton Salisbury, 161 West Moira Street, was driving south on Front street and stopped for the light to change. Patrick Sullivan, also following, with his car damaging the rear fender. It is alleged by Salisbury, in a report to the police, that Sullivan remarked that Salisbury should look out, and thinking Sullivan would follow his car pulled into the curb but the driver went away from the scene without ascertaining the damage caused or giving his name and address. Mr. Salisbury secured the number.

WOMEN WORK IN SOVIET RUSSIA

The usual women's jobs of steno graphy, salesworK, needlework, etc., would smack too much of "gold rule" in these sturdy matrons. When they perform a job it is a real man's job. They play nurse to the giant locomotives of the Western Railway. They oil and wipe each engine before it leaves on its daily run. These women are called members of the "shock" brigade of Russia.

GENERAL ELECTION BY SEPTEMBER IS ELGIN MEMBER'S PREDICTION

Blames Crisis in Wheat Market to Conservative Methods

BRAMPTON, April 7—A federal election within the next five months was forecast here Saturday by MZechell Hepburn, Liberal member for Elgin West, at the Liberal nomination convention held in the Orangemen' Hall.

"If I were so prophesy-I would say the election would be held before September 1" he announced to some 500 applauding delegates.

Additional significance was lent to Mr. Hepburn's prediction by the fact that Ontario Liberals held a caucus Friday at which the election question is said to have been discussed and that earlier in the week the general outlook was thrashed out before general caucus.

Hons Grey, member for West Lambton, also referring to the possibility of an early election, declared emphatically that the King Government was not waiting for an issue but was ready to come to the people at any time on the strength of its past records.

Mr. Hepburn made a strong plea for low tariffs and criticized the high protection policies of the Conservatives as suicidal. When trade was falsely stimulated in any industry, he argued everyone jumped into it with the result that overproduction occurred and prices fell lower than before.

The present crisis in the Canadian wheat market, the speaker declared, was due to the adoption of Conservative ideas of marketing. England, France and other European countries had decided they were not going to be made the victims of any marketing idea and immediately commenced buying grain from Russia, India, the Argentine and Egypt. These countries, finding that their elevators had been emptied, have sown larger acreage of wheat in the following years, with the result that the world's output was greatly increased.

Canada, said the speaker, was at present suffering from this increased production and would continue to suffer. Old Country millers had changed their methods of milling and were now only using ten per cent. Canadian wheat in their flour instead of 60 per cent as hitherto.

The member for West Elgin denied that a tariff on foreign vegetables would in any way assist the market gardeners of Ontario. He drew attention to a 12 per cent tariff that had been placed on butter in the United States. Production had increased by reason of it to such an extent that American farmers were getting less per their butter today than at any time during the past 16 years.

Police and Volunteers Scuffle on Beach at Dandi

The profession accepts the report that the endocrine or ductless glands, which include the thyroid, adrenal and pituitary glands, exert a tremendous influence over growth, blood pressure, loss or increase in weight, and health in general, and correction of any defects caused by these glands is expected to reduce the time lost by railroad employes because of illness.

MONTREAL, Que., April 7.—CP—A fifty-foot leap from the fourth storey of the Westmount police station, to the concrete sidewalk bothered Harry Burke so little that he was able to outdistance the police and retain his freedom half an hour Saturday when he made a desperate bid for liberty as he was being taken from a cell for hearing on an attempted robbery charge. The police were amazed to see Burke vaulting away when they reached the street. He was traced to an apartment house and rearrested.

Driver Runs Off With 2 Gallons of Gas Unpaid

The police are looking for a Plymouth coupe, alleged license number M.-4, the driver of which secured two gallons of gas from Ken Virian, garageman of Shannonville, without paying for it. Early this morning Mr. Virian received a call from the driver stating he had run out of gas about six miles east of Shannonville and wished some gasoline. Mr. Vivian sent his helper to the scene and after the gas was poured into the tank the driver sped from the scene. The car came west and Mr. Virian followed the car to Belleville and with the help of the police tried to trace the car in vain. Some motorists are in the habit of playing this joke on obliging garagemen and some motorist is going to pay dearly for his joke.

Fashionably By

DEAR FEMININE READERS, HELLO!

At last we have a small corner all of our own and I hope you will all take an active interest in this little column, for without your interest it will be a dismal failure.

During the past few days I have told very hard to think of just what we might discuss in our corner, and discarded one by one all the old shopworn suggestions of recipes, household hints, etiquet tips, etc., as being too old-fashioned to interest a modern girl, but that we do not take an interest in the above subjects, far from it, for with each dawning of the new season, some become fully acquainted with the household problems and ways in which to solve them. So then, dear readers, after much thought on the matter I have decided that the subject which holds the greatest interest for a woman and one which she reads with the greatest pleasure is the subject which deals with the latest in fashions, beauty and health as a wardrobe. Therefore in this little column, you and I dear one may discuss this subject so dear to a woman's heart, and I hope that as time goes on we may become better acquainted, you will grow to look for ward to our daily chat.

If you have anything at all you would like advice on either concerning your new spring outfit, or a color scheme for your bedroom, or if you have any suggestions to make, write us at once, but remember one little rule, "Fashionably Speaking" and stick to it, away with all old-fashioned things and strive to make our home and ourselves brighter and happier by thinking and acting with a modern swing.

Our motto is, "Smile" and our password, "Chic".

—LUCILLE.

POEM

April.

A little door, a green door.
Is building on the hill
Two weeks I've heard the tapping
Of small hammers at the sill.
And today I saw a doorknob

Actually We Respond All Too Quickly to Human Emotions to Suit This Authority

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

An Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

Ours is supposed to be a hard-boiled era.

The girls and boys of the present world of you accept the counsel of their elders, gossiping about them in corners and scoffing at almost anything in fancy. They call hardie their own lives thoroughly as they have any intellect to handle. They are free of all those soft sentimentalities that their parents are said to have wallowed in. They are said to be cynical about love, the least because boys and girls know each other so much better nowadays, and so much earlier, and have a far deeper disturbance. All youth, they tell us, is hard-boiled.

Looking at the surface of things, there would seem to be some truth in this. Young people act differently now adays. Boys, even the nicest of them, are less considerate in manner than they used to be and many girls have not been-care way about them that is very touching.

But I wonder sometimes if their manners and failures really mean that young people as I know them. They are very expert, with their lipsticks and their cigarettes, their ways, concealing the wounds of love, but the truth is that they are subject as always to that need of healing. Human beings are still human beings, after all.

When somebody of my own age talks to me of the callousness of our young people I always say that I hope that youngsters will mature as soon as possible to be a great deal more sensible. I mean, in regard to their emotional suffering. It seems to me that the poor children are still a great deal too much paraded by their elders.

What I want to see is the day when the girl whose boy friend has stopped half a dozen dates with her and who has never offered her, anyway, any real proof of devotion will be able to laugh gayly in the direction of the disappearing figure, instead of frantically searching for some magic means of getting the bad-mannered boy back again.

I am also speaking now of those disappointments in love, of actual failure-seems on the part of plighted lovers, in which case whether we young can ever grow sturdy enough to face that, and to realize that pretty much everything to the part of us that feels.

I am also thinking that girls who have danced with a boy a few times, flirted and kissed him a little, or a little, allow their heads to be completely turned, and that they have to undergo terrible agnams when, some fine dit, the fickle youth openly deserts them for a dale elsewhere. They express an intense childish longing to recover the carefree days.

Their momentary love isn't, of course the real thing at all. But I wonder considering and their sense of possession out of proportion, whether it is necessary that you suffer with them. If you possibly could you would supply them with the love charm that they beg for and which girls in a former day must admit it have desired.

What you wish they would understand is that if they really were as self controlled as they look, those sleek, sophisticated, indifferent young things, they needn't suffer for a moment. They are reckless victims of emotion. There are plenty of other boys and girls who are much finer stuff. That boy who failed to keep his date didn't amount to much, anyway.

All the girl needs to do is to let herself be even made attractive than was before, to make a point of having a good time with whoever "crosses" she belongs to, and to decide that the next boy friend must be a better specimen. He will appear in a month or that new boy-friend. Don't let him bring a heart-break with him.

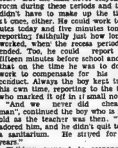
PUTTING A CHILD UPON ITS HONOR

By Constance Cameron

Although this is a story of a teacher, I feel that the system can be utilized in every home where there is a child. In fact, I know it can, because I've seen it done.

A man, a successful business man in the prairies, told me about this teacher of his grammar school years, and the fact that one day he was found out so cleanly in his memory for so long makes the fact all the more significant.



A new teacher came to replace one who had left in the middle of the year. The result of this large roomful of boys who had been without discipline for a month or two was that the one cur friend remembered.

The first day he told his class: "I think you boys are honorable. I don't believe there is a liar in the whole bunch of you. Now when anything happens in this room I want the culprit to tell me. I'll be fair with you, and I'll punish any boy who tells on the other fellow. I'll believe anything you tell me until I catch you in a lie. Then I'll never believe you again as long as I live." There was silence. The boys "thought it over," and a new idea to them.

Well, things "happened" as they will in every school and overflowing and overgrowing boys. But, always the boy who owned the misdeed told on himself. Then the teacher meted out punishment in the form he considered best. Sometimes he gave him or her a piece of work during two or three recess periods. But the man never stayed in the room during these periods and the boy had to do the work alone. He had to get it once, either. He could work ten min utes today and five minutes tomorrow if repenting fallibly but how long he'd worked, when the recess period had ended. The culprit was given five or fifteen minutes before school and apply at that time by the boy who had to work to compensate for his unruly conduct. Always the boy kept track of his own time, reporting to the teacher who marked it off in a small notebook.

"And we never did cheat that I can," continued the boy who is now old as the teacher was then. "We all adored him, and he didn't quit us for his usefulness he stayed for seven years."

Children respond to responsibility. They will be truthful if we really expect them to be and give them half a chance.

THE "LITTLE" EVENING WRAP

Little things are assuming large importance in the Spring mode, that of which is especially true of evening wraps. They are shrinking in size—they are not to be long—extending their claims to beauty. Whereas a few months ago we were much concerned over the appearance of the hip length wrap, we are now accepting the briefer version which reaches only to the waist without a murmur. Developed in soft velveta and crisp taffetas these short little jackets have already won a place in the wardrobes of women who are most fastidious about their evening apparel.

In Women's Sphere

A decree forbidding female employees of the ministry to use rouge or powder has been issued by the Russian minister of agriculture. He has also ordered that skirts be worn reaching to the shoes, and covering necks and arms to the wrist. Disobedience of the order entails immediate dismissal.

Miss Elizabeth Saville, B.R.C., of Victoria, a graduate of that city's Royal Victorian Order of Nurses for Canada, has been appointed matron of the Kootenay, B.C., where she addressed a meeting of the Ladies' Auxiliary to the Club n Hotel Vancouver, and also a luncheon meeting of the Local Council of Women.

Allamont has two new political parties, one called "Women" and the other "Men." At a recent census a man nominated another's wife and that started a campaign of retaliation. Finally, the women's ticket had to be put down to an even dozen to oppose the 13 male candidates, and the women's ticket on the village board of trustees. Mrs. Alex. Moore, Mrs. Dixon, head candidates, are in opposite camps.

When Audrey Newell, author of the Wodge Mystery story, "The Affair of Ed Cavelotiff" told her family that she was going to publish her book without their knowledge, they responded with the following "To my Husband—with love from Mother, Father, Sister, Brother" has been finished sooner."

For the first time in French history a girl just out of her teens has become principal private secretary to a cabinet minister. She is Mlle. Germaine Peyre, daughter of a wealthy and vivacious brunette, whose appointment was announced on "right-hand man" to her father, M. Raoul Peret, former prime minister and now minister of justice in M. Tardieu's government. Mlle Peret has studied law and is an expert on political questions.

Milady Goes A-Shopping

Feminism Has Definitely Arrived to Take Its Place in Milady's Wardrobe

These bright warm days have made feminine thoughts turn definitely to plans for Spring and Summer. The eccentric outdoor sport of window shopping which Milady indulges in, as she sees the stores with the tempting wares has begun. Many winter clothes and hats that seemed so smart just a short time ago have become passe, and there is nothing so dowdy in the eyes of the young woman of fashion as the first days of Spring. Whatever is said, and there has been much discussion, especially from men, of the new styles, and the trend for longer skirts, these are what women are most interested in for spring. The return to the feminine vogue gives no room for doubt whatever. They have been mannish, they have been sporty, according to the influence of their costumes, they have been boldness-suit gay in the freedom of short skirts. Now they will become demure, feminine and sweet, and be part of the appeal of the "feminine" mode this season. And the coats and frocks one sees in the leading stores follow the longer lines and will not only be a case of choice in wearing garments, it will be from necessity. There are no longer two lengths allowed in protesting visibly against ever again showing the knees. That the princess lines seems to take about ten pounded from their weight, which will be not only willing, but eager to adopt the new style.

SHOULD WOMEN EARN PIN MONEY

Status of Those Not Bound to Work Discussed By Economist

Once more the question of woman of independent or semi-independent means, and her right to a niche in industry is up for discussion. Opinions on her as a social phenomenon seem to vary.

"The pin-money worker is all clear out of the economic life" declares Viscountess Rhondda, prominent feminist, feminist and feminine power.

"I cannot agree," objects Miss Frances Perk nt, New York State Commissioner of Labor, who insists that "the woman 'pin-money worker' who competes with the economically worker is a menace to society, a selfish, shortsighted creature, who ought to be ashamed of herself."

"Only where every woman in this community earning a living wage—and by that I mean from $20 to $30 a week for the City of New York — could we have a family established habit of short working hours and some kind of old-age security I am not willing that the woman who at present has no economic necessities to compete with those who have them, with their superior advantages, age'ant the work.

Miss Perk nt thinks the married.

"There are so many fields where their talents can bear rich fruit without hurting less fortunate women workers. Architecture, landscape, music, and other fields of artistic endeavor which require special training are legitimate for the 'pin-money worker.' Politics and charitable work, law, medicine and teaching also would be desirable outlets.

"Idleness is a curse, of course, but if those rich women must have employment, let them go into the industries which needs workers, or devote themselves to social service in their own home."

"Idleness is a curse, of course," comments the Dayton educational authority, "and industry is to be commended at all times and in all places. Especially so in the case of poor girls who must support themselves. Industry means all the difference between a respectable life and self-support by any means, it is not only a matter of bread from the girl's standpoint, but a grave social menace."

"The 'pin-money worker' has been a factor in the life of the country ever since the first modern minded woman began to think. It is women's interesting to earn her own money apart from being father's" says the New York Tribune.

Don't Let Refuse Lie About the House

It's a Sure Road to Disease—Bisch

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

For the maintenance of health all forms and kinds of refuse must be properly disposed of.

In country districts, rags and all other combustible materials are best burned. Animal refuse, such as garbage and other substances that do not burn, should be buried deeply and carefully under water.

Sewage and various types are often the only means and the best of removing refuse from the house. Unless there be some sort of modern self-disposing arrangement, the cesspool soon becomes only a pestial and a temporary expedient.

Cesspools should never be placed closer to a house than fifty feet, and at least one hundred feet from well or spring.

Care must be taken to empty cess pools regularly as well as to ventilate them properly.

Various methods are in use or the acceptation or purification of sewage by chemical means and by precipitation. Sewage may be disposed of by broad spread from six to twelve grains or quicksand, or by means of sprays.

Septic tanks are often valuable if properly built. There are various types available.

No rules can be laid down for the discreal of refuse because local conditions vary greatly.

Sewage and refuse, however, should be got rid of in the quickest way, the less objectionable the better, and as far away from inhabitant as possible.

Under no circumstance, which one can afford to ignore on account of its direct bearing on health, should

THE BEAUTY BOX

By HELEN FOLLETT.

When the tired business girl goes out to luncheon and selects an eating place with the just hard is likeWise and hooting she is adding to the day's fatigue. If she is to get through the afternoon's work and not feel older than Eve when closing time comes, she must eat at a spot where she can eat slowly and get her frazzled nerves knitted up again. Heavy, hurry and noise pull down the forces of resistance. The human machine has a certain amount of endurance; overstrain shows up in one form or another—tired eyes, jumpy nerves, pale lips or facial wrinkles.

Pimples, boils, "slight" skin deglorse are often caused by infection carried by the fingers. Therefore, it is not wise to fuss with blackheads and pimples, which is fatal to some young ladies. Hands off! Won't do! Pimples have not fallen for the nipped-in waistline, thus exhibiting good sense and liberty of action. The high line accentuates body width. It is only for the slender darling that the flat tummy and the nice curve from the waist down over the hips are seen to the height of fashion in any light lacing going on these eyes have not beheld.

After the hair has been permanently waved the number of times it should be conditioned for six weeks before the next wave is given. Proper treatment consists of applications of hot oil at night—olive or mineral oil are good for the minute massage of the scalp that is the routine of shampoo the following morning. If the hair is extremely dry eggs should be used instead of oil for the shampoo.

Expected Seven Tenders

Just when the vehicle portion of the new bridge will be ready for traffic depends of course on the speed with which it is started. It is said that there is all likelihood of the bridge being ready for traffic of vehicles on or before the first of August.

A steel bridge does not take as long to construct as a reinforced concrete structure but it must be remembered that the floor of the steel bridge has to "set" just the same as the floor of the reinforced concrete bridge.

The relative cost of steel and reinforced concrete will be made clear when the tenders are opened tomorrow night. It is said that the steel bridge could be erected for about fifteen thousand dollars less than the concrete bridge. The steel bridge would have, of course, an upkeep cost of four years or so for scraping and painting of the structure.

What is the bridge going to look like? is a question which has been taking up the attention of many citizens. A concrete bridge of the kind contemplated will require two spans, each one hundred and nine feet in length. Each span will require two huge bows or arches, twenty-four feet in the air above the floor of the bridge. These bows will support the floor. The pour the concrete for these arches it will be necessary to construct a wooden platform or bed for each of the river. These huge frames will accordingly rise about fifty feet from the bed of the river.

A steel bridge would be carried by sides about eight feet above the floor of the bridge.

With the routing of traffic by the upper bridge interesting developments in the traffic situation on Front Street are expected. At certain times now the traffic is thrown on that street but quite up movement and with addition of the heavy traffic now handled by Bridge Street it is expected that the parking rules may require modification.

From all appearances it would seem that the city council will tomorrow night go right into the question and make an early award on the contract. There has been considerable comment on the relative beauty of lines of steel with eight inches of solid reinforced concrete with bows twenty-four feet in the air, and the latter structure, of course, be made of white concrete, which will give a very fine effect. Others say that the matter can be passed on the matter favour steel because of the lowness of the sides.

Conditions in the river eliminate any possibility of a bridge with the arches beneath. Bridges with the arches between are structures of great beauty but Belleville, if it is to have a reinforced concrete bridge, must have the arches however. There are many of these latter bridges, it is said in Western Canada.

Merchants feel that the least possible interruption during the construction of this season is desirable. With that thought in mind a number have expressed the opinion that everything could be done in readiness for the work, and the piers constructed and the steel work put on cheaply in the summer time when the water is low than at an earlier date, if such is feasible.

BONES SCATTERED IN GRAVE YARD BY JEWEL THIEVES

NOW READY FOR RESEARCH

"I believe we are just on the threshold of a considerable development in the field of agricultural economics research," observes Dr. J. F. Booth, Commissioner, Agricultural Economics Branch, Dominion Department of Agriculture, "I think as time goes on both farmers and the general public will appreciate and value all economic information that is available on agricultural problems." Coming, as this does, from Dr. Booth, it has particular significance. On two occasions recently, the associate head of the Canadian Horticultural Council and the All-Canadian Agricultural Conference, keen demands for economic surveys and economic statistics were evinced. Not only does such service mean better profitableness of farming, it also provides a medium for checking and correcting the difficulties in existing methods.

A GOOD SLOGAN

"An acre of alfalfa for every cow" is a slogan adopted in many districts where live stock is kept, and with real justification in soil fertility restoration; it is one which receives strong support by the Dominion Department of Agriculture. With the short crops and difficult seasonal conditions of 1928 and 1929 the need of adequate provision with respect to fodder crops became more apparent. Not only will the application of the slogan to alfalfa, or suitable clover or hay crops, go far to meet the urgency of the present situation but it would also provide a useful and profitable rotation medium to replace the up to production capacity and assist in pest control. This scale of planting not only provides adequate pasture but allows a surplus for feeding to other farm animals and often provides a carry-over of hay to a lean year.

FIERCE GOLDEN EAGLE-STROKED BY CHILDREN

MONTREAL, April 7— Nearly a score of children had a very unique experience at the Children's Aid Society lecture by Capt. C. W. R. Knight, of London, England, they went on the platform and stroked the head of a huge golden eagle which the speaker has with him as one of the features of his lecture tours.

The big fierce of the feathered tribe submitted quietly to this treatment though the tips of its wings had been badly nailed it. The eagle is now three years old and was tamed by Captain Knight, a boy, when a cub from the London Zoo. It is a male of the breed known as golden.

Close up scenes of the golden eagle in its native habitat among the crags of Scotland were shown during the evening by film and slides in connection with the lecture "The Romance of the Golden Eagle." A fight to the death between a golden eagle and wasp was "a victim to female aggression" was one of the highlights of the film. These pictures were made during a trip to Scotland by Captain Knight during the spring and summer of 1928. Hours of waiting in concealed hiding places, to get a picture of domestic scenes which showed that the eagle, which is known as the king bird of birds of prey, is actually the most gentle in the care of its eaglets.

GOOD ADVICE GIVEN TO IMMIGRANTS

MONTREAL, April 7. —Within the last four years ago, Thomas Nicholson arrived in Montreal from England. After seven years of hardship and struggle about he found himself without money and without friends. He applied to the Protestant Employment Bureau for aid and found there a series of events he returned to the office of his benefactors, in good health, prosperous and enjoying a good name in the west. He is returning "from a visit to England.

"The man who wants to make good in Canada must be prepared to accept whatever is offered and must at all times be ready to hold on to his work until he is enabled to elevate his position," Mr. Nicholson declared. He himself began by mowing lawns for a stay in Canada, that he would have taken labor employment, for which he, saved up and went to the harvest fields. He again saved up enough money which enabled him to reach Vancouver. After several years of hard work, he rose rapidly to his present position as assistant manager of a division plant.

YOU KNOW WHAT YOU GET WHEN YOU BUY GRADED EGGS

Marketing eggs by the system bearing the red or blue brand of government inspection is the surest way you get. Much effective work has been done by the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture in respect to popularizing Canadian eggs but the serious fact is that there is an acute shortage of best animals which will enable us to meet the high standards of the official grades. Most of the eggs that retail stores, however, stock one or both grades. There are only two grades now branded best "Choice" and "Good." The "choice" best is an all-round improvement by a red brand. This grade is necessarily limited in volume and represents the product of particularly high class well finished cattle. The "good" best is specified by a blue brand and is the grade in greatest supply. It includes only beef which can safely be recommended as of good eating quality. Six vocalic terminals finding the new brands gaining rapidly in popular favour particularly because of the assurance of quality which the government stamp provides.

"RAINBOW MAN" BREAKS RECORDS AT BELLE CAPACITY CROWDS

Saturday was a big day at The Belle Theatre marking the arrival of Eddie Dowling, "The Rainbow Man," accompanied by his diminutive but clever leading lady, Irene Ilsley and Marion Nixon (Mary), besides Doc Hardy, Malcolm Minarvin, "Bigger and Better Then Ever". The event was celebrated by street parades in which the Boys' Pipe Band took a prominent part finishing up with the Argyll's in the theatre. Attendance records for this theatre were badly fractured by the crowds which assembled and were anxious to see "The Rainbow Man". The whole business of Belle Theatre was well attended and as a special feature Manager Forhan gave out basketfuls of lollipops to the boys and girls born under a lucky star.

Another large house greeted the after noon show and in the evening with a capacity audience for the first show there was a crowd lined up for a block waiting for the second show. It was worth waiting for. "The Rainbow Man" being one of those few and far between human interest stories which just grips the heart strings and keeps you in the grip of your throat all the time. The Minstrel show which is a part of the production, "a show within a show", is a novelty and is well relished by the audience.

"The Rainbow Man" is unusual, out of the ordinary run of shows, and includes the public interest being shown in it.

CHICKEN TRAINING SCHOOL

Something new in exhibition work is being developed in connection with the Canadian educational exhibit at the forthcoming World's Poultry Congress to be held in London, England, from next July. It is literally a training school for chickens. The instructor will be a Canadian poultry expert who has won international success in the showing of prize poultry. His pupils will be some sixty of the finest birds of R. O. P. and registration stock it is possible to find in Canada. Prizes as the birds now are as little imperfections of stance, glance or style will be corrected, and when the training course is completed they will appear to near perfection as it is possible to attain. At the Congress these birds will know how to look, how to act, and some of them at least will know how to crow at just the right time.

RADIO FANS CORNER

Keen reception Saturday night, but oh my goodness it fell down badly last night. No, I can't truthfully say that the radio was worth listening to all evening. The trouble bringing in the Columbia stations but of course had CKGW the old standby.

Had all the stars of Rio Rita on that CKGW broadcast didn't they? Fancy! Good too. Played and sang all the beautiful numbers from the show and everybody enjoyed the program immensely.

Big program on to-night too that would be worth your while listening in to. Commencing at 8.30 EAP at 10 p.m. The program is divided into two parts. By the way it is the Roxy and his Gaiety studio concert I believe I forgot to men tion the fact before. Well as I was saying it is in the first part the first part we are to hear famous stagers such as Richard Bennett, Jacques Jacobs, Duolina Giannini, soprano, the Russian Symphonic choir, also Reese Dietmet, violinist and several other outstanding musicians.

During the second half of the program we'll hear Gladys Rice, soprano with the Revelers, Ukman and Arden, piano duo, Billy Jones and Ernie Hare, the Happiness Boys. Frank Munn, baritone and the orchestra. Sounds great doesn't it?

Hoxy and His Gang at 7.30 over WJZ featuring William Robyn tenor. Same station later on in the evening at 9.30, we'll hear Chesebrough Real Folks.

If you listen in to WJZ at nine o'clock tonight you'll hear a snappy program fans, Ted Florito and his Missing orchestra with Dick Newlin saxophone soloist, male trio, Tom, Dick and Harry and Retting and Platt, piano duo. Doesn't that sound enticing?

Over the WABC chain to-night we'll hear the program "Voices from Filmland" and of course are featuring several prominent movie stars, who they are is a secret just at present. The program begins at 7.30, don't be late.

SUPPORTING CONCERTS

Music week is now being observed in some centres. This is particularly fitting owing to the rich literature of music pertaining to the season of Lent and to the springtide.

Musical societies at this time of the year generally present a program of numbers. At this season the human heart is unusually keen to musical sounds and to the sounds of life in awakening nature.

With the distractions of radio and the attractions of talking pictures, concerts might be thought to have a hard way but musical events in Belleville prove that the people like the singer as well as the song, the instrumentalist as well as the music.

In supporting music throughout the year people are doing a good thing for art. The church still upholds music as one of the most potent influences in moulding character.

BRIGHTER AUSPICES

Tomorrow night in the presence of the new decorations of the city hall the city council will discuss the issues of the bridge and the filtration plant.

These are big issues full of importance to the citizens.

Color and form doubtless affect the mind. With the cheerful and artistic interior of the council chamber let us have more optimistic thoughts, to bigger thoughts on the part of councils?

Not all city council chambers are as bright as Belleville's. Most resemble the old style which marked the chamber here for more years than any resident can recall. For generations the decoration has been darkly sombre. It is remarkable that in the former decoration of the hall there was no sign of red except perhaps in the carpet and that there have not been many encounters in that room. Red may be august but it is credited with disturbing the quiet meditations of a bull and even of disturbing people. Perhaps the absence of the red explains why council meetings here have been quarrelless.

However these things may be, the city council has been doing a good work in renovating the hall. If there is a centre that a municipality ought to guard with care it is the city hall. It should be worthy in its beauty of the municipality. The interior of the local hall will when finished be worthy of Belleville.

STORY TELLER NEEDED

The 125th anniversary of the birth of Hans Christian Andersen has been observed in Denmark with national festivities. Fifty thousand children marched through the streets of the capital after characters of the deathless books of the wizard of story-telling. Figures which have impressed so firmly the young of all periods since the stories were composed strode in that procession.

The anniversary was a time when children held sway, children big and little. Children like fairies. So do their parents and their elders. Nothing else can explain the oceans of fiction which is drunk every year by the adult reading public the world over. Fiction is to live there that fables are not good for the young have a losing fight before them for the child mind if it has not a fable to answer its call. It will promptly make one up of outlandish proportions in its incidents, its plot and its heroes.

Andersen speaks to the elders too. The child stories may have a deeper meaning for those who wish to symbolize. Andersen had a direct contact with life, he was a melancholy man and there is a strong trace of the brooding viking in his makeup. Social criticism may be found underlying his stories in places.

As one writer in the New York Times says, "the children need Andersen and some of him is badly needed by the parents. No greater charter of freedom was ever written than 'The Emperor's New Clothes' for grown-up men and women who are always being terrorized into accepting dogmas they dislike and acclaiming beauties they do not see."

LIFE'S CHANCES

Man's chances of reaching old age in the United States today are less than woman's and the chances of both have decreased in the past ten years, it was reported at a meeting of the boards of council of the Milbank Memorial Fund held at New York.

A lower mortality in the early years of life, especially among babies, and fewer deaths from the more infectious diseases have increased the expectancy of life at birth, but death is taking an increasing toll among people in the prime of life and after middle age, Miss Dorothy G. Wiehl of the fund's research staff said.

From 35 to 55 per cent. of all deaths in the United States after the age of thirty-five years are chargeable to eight causes, the report states. These are tuberculosis, heart disease, cancer, diabetes, cerebral hemorrhage and apoplexy, pneumonia, nephritis and accidents.

The research workers analyzed in detail the deaths from these eight causes during the years from 1921 to 1927. These years were chosen because they were the best health years so far experienced in this country.

"Striking changes in the death rates among men and women of different ages occurred during this period," Miss Wiehl said. "At every age the change is more favorable for females than for males, and this is particularly true of the ages of middle life. In the age group from thirty-five to forty-four, the death rate for males in 1927 showed an increase of 12.5 per cent. over the 1921 mortality as against a decrease in the female death rate of 4 per cent. At the ages from forty-five to fifty-four, the increase for males was 13.5 per cent. compared with an increase of 2.5 per cent. for females. Even at the ages from twenty-five to thirty-four, a more favorable course in the female death rate was observed.

"Between 1921 and 1927," the report continues, "in the age group from 65 to 74, the increase in deaths of men exceeded that of women by 320 per 100,000. The death toll for men exceeded the death toll for women in each of the causes studied except diabetes.

"Out of every 100,000 men between the ages of 35 and 54, in the country's population, forty-three more died from heart diseases in 1927 than in 1921, thirty more died from accidents, twenty-one died from pneumonia, nine more died from cancer, making a total of 103 these four causes along."

These four causes along.

SIDELIGHTS

THE CALL

The eaves are adrip in the April sun;
Cross mushy meadows the rivulets run;
There's surfeit of song from the birds of morn;
Joy to the world- 'tis the spring re-born.

The sap starts up in the frost dead trees;
There's a soulful sigh in the soft south breeze;
The frenzied frogs coming back to life
Fill the evening air with a throaty strife.

The willow shoots take a golden hue;
While the pussy buds burst out anew.
There's a tender green 'round the sodden swale,
And a heartening hope in the first loon's wail.

The ice moves out from the land-locked lake;
There's a swirl on the bar where the salmon break.
Comes the waited call to the sportsman's ear:
"Pack up! Pull out- The fish are here!"

—George A. Wright.

YAZOO CITY, in the State of Mississippi, considerably south of the Mason and Dixon line, is a city where the community spirit rides high, wide and handsome, where they say such things and do such things—slightly different from the cool blooded way of the northern clime. Editor of Yazoo Sentinel had a row with the Yazoo Mayor and the Mayor just politely let daylight into the editor's brain box with his trusty Colt. then walked into an undertaker's parlor and lifted his own crown from its foundation, thus making business good for the undertaker who was a relative and a crowing good Front Page story for the Yazoo Sentinel. Yazoo is some city but just a trifle too hectic in its journalism and local politics to suit a Belleville bred and born journalist. Accidentally the mayor took a couple of shots at a dentist who was the opposing candidate in the mayoralty campaign but the dentist was going so fast that only his coat tails were punctured. The editor refused to allow the doctor to probe for the bullet until he had dictated an account of the shooting to his reporter. Then he died.

THE SHOW MUST GO ON, so when an acrobat fell from his high perch during the Ringling circus performance in New York City the other day, who killed the proprietor responded regardless. His father who was in the act with him saw him about to fall and tried to intercept his fall by his body but the falling boy and the ground, to break the force of the fall, but failed, and his son was killed. But the show went on.

"VAPOROUS PERFUME that will leave something of myself in its wake," was the order given by a Paris flapper in one of the new perfume bars of the gay and Gallic city. Perfume cocktails are made up to order by neat young barmen who know their smells and the girls get perfumes made up to suit their personalities. One young woman asked for something "rare, strong, exciting and slightly peppery." If some of the more exotic creatures were stripped of perfume, rouge, lip lustre and gay garments would they look like anything human or just like a show window dress form stripped of its decorations?

After the service the preacher who was an old-fashioned type, gave the old lady his views on eternal punishment. There was a great deal of fire and brimstone in it.

"I don't believe it," the old lady said, impulsively; "no human constitution could possibly stand it."

KIWANIS TRYING TO HELP HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS

6000 Kiwanis From U.S. and Canada to Meet 14th Annual Convention

NEW YORK CITY — While vocational guidance is largely organized capital, 400 Kiwanis clubs are now attempting to help hundreds of high school students in 1843 towns from the Atlantic to the Pacific realize their commercial and professional dreams for future success. "Every boy or girl has the chance to investigate the city business or profession in which a Kiwanian may be engaged," declares Lynn A. Emerson, New York City, vocational chairman. "Youth is filled with fanciful desires and wishes, but by counsel and observation a doctor lawyer, or merchant can soon tell the aptitudes of a young person. By investigating many jobs and vocations, Kiwanis hopes that many a promising youth will find his natural bent," he exclaims.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — "Six thousand Kiwanians from the U. S. and Canada will dip into all the social scenes and fun here June 29 to July 3, when they gather here for their 14th annual convention," Merton S. Heiss, convention manager, states.

"Late convention will bring together men from 1843 towns actively interested in under-privileged children, citizenship, education, immigration, health, delinquency, juvenile court work, community life problems and urban-rural relations work.

Due to 15 years of social and civic research work, accomplishing more than 30,000 individual activities each year, Kiwanis will stress at all the technological lessons the need for more study by adults of the current issues in public affairs. "Our organization has made a splendid contribution to the community life of Canada, but we are still challenged by the major social problems," declares Horace W. McDavid, of Decatur, Illinois, president of Kiwanis.

TOURIST SEASON MOST PROMISING

Inquiries Pour Into Secretary's Office and Chamber of Commerce

That Belleville and district is sure to enjoy "tourist prosperity" during the coming summer, is the reasonable conclusion if one is to judge from the number of inquiries being received at the Chamber of Commerce and the Belleville Motor Club. The greater majority of the inquiries are from prospective American tourists, and there is every indication that tourist traffic will be heavier than in former years. The inquiries deal chiefly with camp sites, routes, fishing points and points of historical interest. Summer cottages will be greatly in demand, which means that a large number of visitors will spend the summer vacation in this vicinity. Mr. J. Sheffield of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, stated this morning, that all inquiries are being answered and literature supplied with the scenic and historical beauty of this district being forwarded to interested parties.

A letter was received at the Chamber of Commerce this morning from Mr. Urban J. Peters of Altoona, Penn. who was in the district, and who is bringing in with him a party of eight young men Mr. Peters' inquiry deals with the procuring of a suitable cottage another inquiry has been received by Mr. Sheffield, from the principal of the Philadelphia teachers college in Dekalb, Ill. A party of teachers will be motoring and going to tour Ontario during the coming summer and wish to spend some time in Belleville and vicinity, visiting place of historical and scenic interest.

Tourists have already begun to pass through the city, and each day the Chamber of Commerce is visited by parties, who inquire chiefly about routes and the conditions of the highways. The real tourist season will not begin for another month yet.

To look at Mr. Hyman one would never think that he had been a death's door for some time, fighting a virulent attack of pneumonia.

Outside of the period of his sickness, Mr. Hyman said that he had enjoyed his trip immensely. "I never felt better in my life," he said to The Ontario Intelligencer today. "I feel just fine."

QUIET SAILING TRIP ROUND THE WORLD

(Canadian Press)
Montreal, April 7.—Eighteen men in quest of a thorough holiday who can enjoy an ocean voyage on an old fashioned sailing ship, have an opportunity of an unique trip if they accept an invitation which has been issued by the Montreal Board of Trade at its council meeting here.

The council was advised of a proposal to charter a sailing ship in a square rigged sailing vessel of about 3 500 tons net register and sail from New York on or about September 1 next. The ship will take about eighteen months and stop at about 15 ports, touching all the principal ocean ports of the world. While the vessel is equipped with auxiliary engines, it is expected that these will be very little used other than as nearly as possible the voyage will conform to the good old days prevailing in the old sailing days. The ship will be provided by a capable captain and a large crew, and excellent passenger accommodation will be provided. As the accommodation is limited, only about fifteen couples will be taken as passengers.

NO ROOM FOR KU KLUX KLAN HERE SAYS CLERGYMAN

Hamilton Divine Hurls Verbal Spears at Hooded Order

Hamilton, April 7— Rumor that several members of the Ku Klux Klan had night visited the home of Hev. D. L. Cowan of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church following publication of an advertisement announcing that at tonight's service he would speak on the activities of the order, were denied last night by the clergyman.

It was learned, however, that a high official of the Klan called Rev. Mr. Cowan on the telephone and offered to supply literature which might be of assistance. Rev. Mr. Cowan said he invited the man, whose name was not given to his home and he spent an hour with him.

"He was very courteous and I availed myself of the opportunity to obtain information regarding the Klan," said Rev. Mr. Cowan. "I am open to intimidation, but admitted that he had learned of the cancellation of the reports regardint a visit by a K.K.K. delegation to his home.

In his sermon Rev. Mr. Cowan was sympathetic to some of the views of the organization, especially the wearing of hoods at present-day, but declared that there is room in Canada for only one flag and that is the Union Jack. He said he had access to literature which showed that the organization have seen and referred to the visit of an official to his home.

At the outset he made it clear that he knew he objected to the aims of the K.K.K. did not signify that he was opposed to the R. C. citizens, stated at the order for its anti-Jewish and anti-Negro attitude. The speaker said, and he condemned introduction of such issues.

"There have been blackhearted whites, as all of you know. It is not the color of the skin but the kind of birth that counts," the pastor said.

Rev. J. A. McMillan Tells of Conversions in Pagan Countries

The Christian and Missionary Alliance Conference held in the auditorium of the Y.M.C.A. last night was a revelation to the many who were present in the conversions of pagans and Mohammedans and he also discussed some of the difficulties of working amongst the Mohammedan people. The general problems he stated, are much the same as in every part of the heathen world. There is the difficulty of language and the task of rating of the gospel to bear upon the people, and the building up of the converts until they become self-supporting congregations.

At the evening service after prayer had been taken, Rev. Mr. Macy Dewart, the gifted Irish evangelist, gave a powerful gospel message and at the conclusion several present responded to the invitation to seek salvation. At each service the following gospel singers, Misses Decker, Swanson and Clinter, gave splendid solos, some of which were such appreciated by all present.

Pledges for the day amounted to $600 a sum much above the year previous. Rev. M. W. Willoughby of the Y.M.C.A. who is in charge of the local gospel effort, announced that the conference being held here, and he predicted that the services held.

DIPHTHERIA CAN BE PREVENTED

Parents Can do Great Deal Towards Checking the Disease

If diphtheria is preventable, then why is there any diphtheria, is a question which anyone would naturally ask. The answer is that many people whether or not their children become ill, are careless and unconcerned about it. No one is indifferent to the sufferings of others, but it is then because people are completely ignorant of the fact that diphtheria is preventable, or else that having heard such to be the case, they have not realized that their child is also to be a victim of the disease.

It is likely that this lack of understanding regarding the practical application of such statements, to which may be added the human tendency to procrast nate, is responsible for the failure of parents to do what is apparently so obvious by the thing to do. We have said we are told about something like diphtheria immunization, but it is never quite strikes home that it's has been proved to be safe and to deal with our children; it is something of general good, but the personal application is not grasped. If it's seen as a personal matter, a matter that comes out of the good intent is put off. There is no necessity to delay, it should not be a very rare disease. It is quite within the bounds of possibility to see the diphther a wards in our isolation hospitals empty.

It all comes back to the individual home, to the individual parents. Given their action as individuals depends whether or not these possibilities are made real—it is responsibility is a personal one which cannot be passed on to other shoulders. The protection of your children rests upon you and no one else. Health Departments may aid you in meeting your respons'bilities by informing the facts and methods that is to help parents to do their duty, not to relieve them of it.

Questions concern'ng Health addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Six Senior Leagues

President Milliner, Oakville, who presided, presented his report, followed by that of Secretary Snyder, who advised the delegates that the roster of the association for 1929 showed six senior leagues with 36 clubs; 16 intermediates with 62 clubs; 11 juniors with 33 clubs; 5 juvenilies with 20 clubs, and 4 bantams with 16 clubs, or 42 leagues of 196 clubs, lauding certificates for 500 senior, 1,875 intermediate, 1,380 junior, 600 juvenile and 740 bantam players, of a total of 5,270 players under the banner of the O.B.A.A., as a result of which 81 clubs took part in the play-offs only two defaults, due to excessive distances and bad finances for transfer of players.

At the morning session, which was significant, in that all of the past presidents were in attendance, the delegates dealt at length with the report of annual convention, consisting of proposed amendments and changes to be considered and by-laws, which a sub-committee had drawn up. MORE MILK IS USED

During the past eight years domestic milk consumption per capita has practically doubled in Canada, says the Dairy and Cold Storage Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, attributes this increase to the growing demand of the sweet milk trade and to the increasing popularity of ice-cream. Canada's exports of dairy products have declined materially and this has been due in part to the increasing domestic consumption and in part to the large numbers of high quality milch cows which have been sold to United States buyers and gone out of the country. In this connection it is noted that there were approximately 100,000 fewer good milch cows in Canada in 1928 than there were in 1927. Canadian dairymen are realizing the economic danger of the situation, however, and few sales of high grade milch cows are now reported.

CELEBRATES HIS 93RD BIRTHDAY

George Albert Wright, Marmora, Enjoys Excellent Health

MARMORA, April 5.—Failing eyesight is the only infirmity which George Albert Wright, who celebrates his ninety-third birthday today has to bear. He is Marmora's oldest resident.

"Al", as he is known in Marmora by his many friends, is mentally and physically active. His memory of happenings far back in his lifetime as well as more recent ones is excellent and on a visit the other day he was found to be a very interesting conversationalist with topics of a great diversity at his finger tips.

Until a month ago the old gentleman paid fortnightly visits to his barber shop believing in safety first, he says, on account of his defective vision, he now gratefully accepts the services of a grandson, who has the safety razor with a dexterity that is reassuring. "Al" takes an occasional walk and a day or so ago he visited a nearby relative for social meal.

"I suppose you are going to vote Liberal this year if there is an election," was a tentative suggestion of his interviewer which brought the light of battle to the old man's eyes. He exclaimed, "Whaa! Not Conservative. This was followed by an amused chuckle. He has been a staunch Tory throughout his life. One of his lifelong desires has been to see only two political parties in the field, the Liberals and the Conservatives.

Mr. Wright has been a heavy smoker but likes the occasion pull on a pipe. He never chewed tobacco.

Twice married, there are four sons and one daughter of his first marriage living. His present wife is 82 years old and they both live with one of their sons, Robert. -

10,000 STINGS BY MAIL

With the improved technique which has been developed for the handling of package bees it is now possible to get them by mail, and the bee experts of the Dominion Department of Agriculture find that very satisfactory results are obtained by spiriting through the use of package bees to replenish weakened colonies and to establish new ones. The bee package is a wire-covered wooden frame work usually containing two pounds of live bees. There are some five thousand bees to a pound. A shipment by mail is now possible and shounds a package of bees become queen-right in transit ten thousand stings is the potential result.

OBITUARY

JASPER DINGMAN DOXEE

The startling announcement that Grim Reaper came to Doxee's Corner, and one who has been with us for over 72 years was called Home, his life work finished. Up about his accustomed farm duties, talking with his friend Curtis Doxee, a moment before, he quietly sank without a murmur—and the news was sent about that Jasper Doxee was dead.

Jasper, through this trying winter had a severe cold, lately feeling better yet complaining of a pain in his side and of not having much strength. Evidently wearing out he went to his reward, Wednesday, March 26th, 1930. Of a quiet, home-loving disposition he made and kept friends both young and old.

School was dismissed, not to be resumed until after his funeral, a tribute of respect to the deceased, for very many passing through the school ever since it was built have attended and went to Jasper's for anything they needed and were ever welcome. Just as they of the old school had gone to his father's, Mr. Peter Doxee.

After the death of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Doxee, Jasper and his sister, Susie, managed the home and as one can well imagine from their door, and the church across the road was their especial care.

Here at the Doxee United Church his funeral was held, Rev. L. S. Tyoop, the minister of the circuit, and Rev. D. Sidnon, a former minister, officiating, while Prof. Waldon of Picton, had charge of the music. Each spoke lifelong friend of his, that being 3 Timothy, 4, 7 and 8 verses—"I have kept the faith."

Jasper was a hearty, manly man, but likes the occasion pull on a pipe. He never chewed tobocco.

Twice married, there are four sons and one daughter of his first marriage living. His present wife is 82 years old and they both live with one of their sons, Robert. -

The church was filled and all said "He will be missed."

About to be inducted as elder in the Little Church at the Corner," having been unanimously chosen by the congregation, ere he could assume that duty, he was called to a higher service.

WHY KEEP OLD HENS?

In discussing methods of increasing egg production P. C. Elford, Dominion Poultry Husbandman, asks the very pertinent question, "why keep old hens?" He provides the answer by citing official figures from tests conducted by the Experimental Farms Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture showing that, when pullets are tested against hens the average yearly profit over cost of feed is, for the pullet $3.34 and for the hen, $1.86; presented in another way, it costs 20 cents to produce one dozen eggs through pullets as against 40 per dozen cost of 35 cents with old hens. It is also pointed out that it takes 60 eggs to pay for the cost of the bird, and any pullet or hen which doesn't lay at least this number is just a bill of expense. There are a number of good ways of getting hens that will lay a profit over their cost and keep.

BETTER FED ASSURED

Changes in grading standards of feed oats and barley promulgated recently by the Feed Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture give Eastern feeders the assurance of better grades of feeds. Under the new standards better cleaning to remove weed seeds is required so that even the lowest grades of feed oats and barley will contain not more than three per cent. of weed seeds. One of the major complaints by Eastern feed users against feeds from the West is that screenings and the cleaned feeds can now be bought at certificates as to freedom from weed seeds as well as to quality.

WORKMEN FIND CANNON BALLS

Records Tell of Skirmish at Lemoine's Point in War of 1812

Kingston, Ont., April 7 — Some months ago, while workmen were excavating on the foundation site of a former building at Lemoine's Point, the summer home of W. D. Coverdale, of New York, president of the Canada Steamship Lines, they found several old cannon balls, and it was presumed that during the War of 1812 the points had been fortified and possibly an engagement had occurred between British land forces and an American warship. Proof that an engagement occurred off the Point, then called Herchimer's is contained in Canada's records which tell of a skirmish with the enemy (Americans) during the fall of 1813 at that place.

Herchimer's Point was five miles west of Kingston on the Bay of Quinte. The British officers thought the American ships might attempt to land and enter Kingston. A telegraph signal and two cannon had been planted at the Point. From there a fair view of the Upper Gap leading to Lake Ontario was to be had. Finally one morning the American fleet composed of 14 sail, large and small, appeared off the Upper Gap. A shot was fired by a Britishman there and replied to. A schooner, the Simcoe, was chased, but escaped by running over a bar between some islands at Herchimer's Point. She received several shots and sank when she reached Kingston. The inhabitants along the coast were ordered into the interior (Frontenac country) with all their stock. The American fleet passed along, not far from shore, and the British field artillery moved along at an equal pace, firing being kept up between them. Canada's father was present on the occasion and relating a short distance from the shore. The Governor was with the troops and as a shot from a ship passed just over them, knocked the top rail of a fence nearby and went bounding and plowing up the ground.

The troops reached Kingston as soon as the enemy fleet and were paraded in a concealed spot behind the jail on ground now occupied by St. George's cathedral at the corner of King and Johnson streets. Cannon balls were flying over buildings in the lower part of the town. As a precaution against the Indians attempting to capture Kingston, with its garrison, naval depot and dockyard, the ambush about the place was ready. The enemy, however, did not attack, but landed further down the St. Lawrence." The battle of Chrysler's Farm followed, with the complete repulse of the American forces.

Close to the spot on Mr. Coverdale's property where the cannon ball remainders of the War of 1812-14 were found, the successor of the Canada Steamship Lines is now being built.

Bungalow Camping in Rockies

Spring is here, according to the calendar, though you may not otherwise have noticed it, and with the spring the thought of vacation begins to gather strength. In another month or six weeks the bungalow camps of the Rockies, famous the world over for their beauty, will have opened again for the season. Outstanding among them are the Lake O'Hara Bungalow camp (lower left); just behind Lake Louise; Yoho camp (lower right), under the spray of the Takakkaw Falls; and Emerald Lake chalet (upper), by many considered to be the gem of the Rockies, although artists and others will often contend that Lake O'Hara is a close rival. Stays at reasonable cost may be made in any or all three of these camps, since they are not very far from one another and are easily accessible. As it by no means minor part of the lure of these camps there is the attraction of trail riding on trained, sure-footed mountain cayuses over mountain passes through scenes of the most magnificent scenery in the world. Centre inset are the famous Twin Falls near the Yoho Camp.

HANDLING WOOL ON NEW BASIS

Members of Canadian Co-operative Decide to Adopt Another Method

Toronto, Ont., April 7—"Contract system now in full force and handling contract wool only" is the announcement of G. E. O'Brien, General Manager of the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers, following the annual meeting of that organization in Regina a few days ago. This brief statement means that a sufficient number of shearers throughout the Dominion have definitely signed contracts to make possible the 2,000,000 pound objective set at the annual meeting a year ago. Only growers who have signed wool contracts have the privilege of shipping through the co-operative.

This sign-up was secured without any spectacular campaign, Col. Robert McEwen, President of the Wool Growers, pointed out, the bulk of the work having been done through the mails. Moreover in Eastern Canada, where it was felt that growers might not be as "contractminded" as in the West, wool seems to have been signed up as readily as elsewhere. This change simply means that the Canadian Co-operative is assured of a steady volume of business for a definite number of years, and that the growers who sign up will strengthen very materially their own marketing system. Shearers who have been shipping through the Co-operative regularly since it started in 1920 ago have expressed the opinion very forcibly that they should all be made to carry the load of the "in and out" man in times of falling markets. But a review of the previous history of the selling of grading of wool in Canada indicates that no just what has been the case. Last year, for instance, when the market situation was very favorable, the co-operative secured management year in the history of the Co-operative, and just after the war when wool shipments reached their peak was another season of felling markets.

Both Colonel McEwen and Mr. O'Brien reported the Association in sound condition. Despite the fact that receipts of wool have been heavier than usual, the demand for wool has been dull, and prices down 50 per cent from a year ago. Col. McEwen stated that the average quantity of wool had been sold "at prices much above those current on today's market."

In reviewing the situation, Col. McEwen mentioned the efforts of the Co-operative in getting Canadian Mills to use more Canadian wool and urged shearmen to further their cause by encouraging the use of "comfortable woollens" wherever possible. He also stated that quite a nice demand for high quality lamb was being worked up in the summer months with the tourist trade. In this connection quality was stressed, quality in breeding and also feeding, as the whole trade depends on the quality of the lamb offered. Quality would also do much to hold the domestic market against the huge imports of lamb and mutton from Australia and New Zealand it was stated.

Colonel McEwen is a man of too long experience to make any definite market predictions, but he did point out that as far as was known there was no great surplus of wool in the world today, as there was during the depression following the war period. Furthermore the President of the Canadian Co-operative Wool Growers pointed out that owing to low wool and lamb prices, a pronounced reduction of flocks has already begun in Australia, the greatest of all sheep countries.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

MARRIED TO A QUEEN

by

Josephine Sexnan Cronin

Copyright, 1930, International Features Service, Inc.

As he left the taxi at 48th street and 5th avenue, Larry Fairfield, in the mid-fifties, presented a pleasant blend of the sophistication of a long bachelor hood chastened by almost twenty years of marriage.

His attentions to the lady who followed him out of the taxi were not those of courtesy. Had Claudia Fairfield been an empress she could have received no more, and she exacted the utmost.

They had alighted some distance from the curb. She preceded Larry to the sidewalk. With imperial tread she walked down the avenue, Larry falling in two steps behind.

His eyes rested on Claudia not without satisfaction. At forty she could still arrest and hold the roving glance. What a beauty she had been as twenty! Little wonder that her face had supplanted all others that he had become captive, slave to her arbitrary whims. Larry's mouth turned in a smile at once comic and rueful.

Claudia's head curved toward him over her shoulder. They were in front of the Sherwood. She nodded toward it and shot him a vivid glance, changed implacable. The Sherwood, rounding out a quarter-century, still held its sway as one of the city's outstanding hotels.

Larry's shoulders sagged. His smile was now wry. It retailed his lips, knowing one corner of his mouth. It faded slowly as he relived distant hours, walking in a day-dream. He was dimly aware of Claudia's outline just ahead arrogant, stately.

Stately, as if all those about her were of commoner and ill-smelling clay. So she had, appeared that night, a year after their marriage, when Stuart Ream had telephoned that Larry needed him. Larry could see Ream gloating over his ruse as a porker over a heap of offal. It was satisfaction for the jealousy that had poisoned him when worsted in the pursuit of Claudia. It's rivar's ridicule, his baiting Larry to drink were unanswered. He recalled with pity for Ream.

Larry him-self, better than any one, knew the perils for him of the cheering glass. Before their marriage he had given to Claudia his pledge of future abstinence with a clean faith. So heady had he been under the spell of her charm that there was no pledge he could have asked he would have withheld.

He had not faltered in allegiance to his promise at the reunion dinner on the old Fulton Oarsmen until Ream had got going his devilish tricks. Ream had struck the first spark that sent a flare of comic darts with Larry as their mark. If they had but kept to him alone. But there were the jibes at his Puritanism since he had come under Claudia's sway. Ream had led the crowd to its bait. It was too much for human flesh. There was but one stopper for the vial of their ridicule. Larry used it. How his arm had quivered as he held a glass high for all to see and then choked down the biting sherry! He had joined in the applause at his own temerity.

He had won peace. The first gulp made way for deeper draughts. Down into the opposite side of the table Ream sat, slowly drawing on a cigar. On his face a hellish smile appeared and disappeared like the shadow of an insect quit evil spirit.

Then the dancing girls' surprise entrance through an innocent panel.

"Vivette!" like a creature of light and fire she herded the rig.

"Larry Fairfield." The reproach in her voice lingered fresh as if just spoken. She had bounded across to him.

"You don't deserve it, bad boy. No, dear boy."

He felt her slender, supple arm about his neck. He drew her small enticing body close. All was gassing in a phantom world. One reality clutched at him, a vague fear.

Larry glimped Ream leave the table and pass out of the room. He saw h'm slander back presently. Ream followed him. Vivette in his arms, with a side-glance.

Vivette chatted gaily with the occasional punctuation of a leg flung out or a tatoo with her finger-tips on the back of Larry's hand.

His arm possessed her, his mouth was upon hers when a hush fell upon the room. Larry looked up.

Framed meanly by the tapestry hangings of the doorway Claudia stood, regal.

Larry felt scorched under the denunciatory look she fastened upon him.

Her choked words stuck in scornful heavy with indignation: "Larry Fairfield! My husband!"

His arms had dropped from Vivette as if stung. From chill reaction, a hot indignation filled him. It subsided, and stood up, rigid, sober.

Without a look to right or left, he walked to the wide doorway.

Claudia hs the way.

A step and Larry was abreast of her. Without sight and hearing of the thrilled ryssiers or outraged majesty wheeled upon him.

"You shall never again walk beside me. Hereafter you will follow me."

At the recollection the blood surged into Larry's neck and face.

Ream's scarring laugh ringing in h's ears he followed Claudia out.

Larry looked up and about him sharply on the sun-flooded avenue. Claudia had moved off before his unseen eyes. Ah, there she was, before a showwindow of an artists.

She moved on. Larry fell into place two steps behind, his lips turned in a smile rueful yet comic. What was the mystery of Claudia's charm that he had gone on through the years paying the tribute of obedience to this absurd wh'm of a self-crowned queen?

The lines of Larry's mouth relaxed until the whole face wore its habitual expression of tolerant indulgence toward his own vagaries as well as those of his kind.

IF the number of times certain questions are propounded in the average Canadian home, could be tabulated, we venture the guess that the above would be a "leading question" . . . . Leading, unfortunately, to many a heated argument.

But after all "Where it goes" is not nearly as important as "What did we get for it?!" . . . BRIGADIER GENERAL MITCHELL SEES ST. LAWRENCE DEVELOPMENT

Declares it is Difficult to Forecast Limit of Dominion's Achievement

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 7.—(By The Canadian Press).—Outlining the remarkable development of Canada within the past 50 years, Brig. General H. Mitchell of Toronto, today told the American Society of Mechanical Engineers it was difficult to select a measure for the future. "If the external and nature of the country's natural resources were known, then some measure might be contrived; but they are not known," he declared.

"Not much over half of the agricultural lands are as yet occupied. The mineral possibilities of the country can as yet hardly be guessed at, as the contents of the pre-Cambrian shield have been ascertained at only a few places and much of the territory has not even been explored. Consequently, Canada's wealth and air is only partially accomplished and the next decade will see more routes opened up especially northwards. The water power already developed is but 14 per cent of that known to be possible

"The outstanding probability in the near future is a greatly increased development within the next decade on the St. Lawrence where the combination of power with deep-ocean connection will form a very large factor in the development of Canada's contiguous material resources."

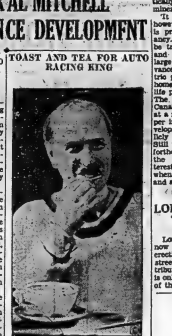
Brig.-Gen. Mitchell, outstanding Canadian engineer and former president of the Engineering Institute of Canada delivered a monograph upon engineering in Canada, in connection with the American society's golden jubilee meeting. His outline was in colaboration with the desires of the association for a complete review of engineering development within the past 50 years, and Brig.-Gen. Mitchell was one of 16 tried to deliver a monograph. Each tries, to drived a monograph. Each described the part which the engineering profession has played in the development and other progress of his country with respect to economic, social, political and cultural aspects. Brig.-Gen. Mitchell stressed that as far as Canada was concerned, the outstanding fact was the dominion is essentially a new country, and practically all her development has occurred within the past 75 years, and in fact, the essential portion of it within 50 years.

Brig.-Gen. Mitchell was presented on the occasion of the celebration functions by Hon. Vincent Massey, Canadian Minister to the United States, in company with the other distinguished leaders, the Toronto engineer has been presented with a special gold medal.

"Canada is essentially a new country," Brig.-Gen. Mitchell emphasized. "Originally populated along the Atlantic coasts and about the Great Lakes it is only about 50 years since the commencement of a definite movement of population to the regions westward of the lakes, out to the Prairies and to the Pacific coast. Canada's growth westward proceeded in the same manner as did that of the United States 50 years earlier.

"The present population, hardly yet reaching 10,000,000, is confined mainly to the provinces on the Atlantic, to the regions about the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes and to an area not more than 300 miles wide stretching across the western prairies and the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific, a total transcontinental distance of about 3,500 miles

"Economically, however, Canada presents a much larger figure, for its developable area as now being disclosed, containing the most valuable natural resources and largely capable of sustaining population, may be viewed as a belt across the continent of from 800 to 1,000 miles in width. The possibilities of the New North of Canada are now beginning to be realized and within the past few years a distinct northward movement of population and development has occurred.



"Naturally, the early engineering was directed toward the upbuilding of community life in town and city and the necessary communications to serve these. The pioneer and water transportation was followed, 75 years ago, by the introduction of railways. It is but 50 years ago that the great transcontinental railway, the Canadian Pacific was undertaken, as private enterprise but it rapidly became the link to bind the new Western provinces to the Eastern. It, with the intercolonial railway serving the Maritime provinces, made practical the political federation of the provinces which, in 1867, created the Dominion of Canada.

"It is difficult to appraise the value of the transcontinental western railway enterprise in moulding and developing Canada, both economically and politically. As an engineering project, it most decidedly entered the national life and made possible the rapid development of the country from the time when the first trainload of wheat came out from the West in 1885 and the first passenger train westward crossed to the Pacific in June, 1886. Indeed this railway and the other great system since built, the Canadian National, Government owned, have togeth er, with their ocean connections, become links of the Empire as well of the Dominion.

"Each country or region in which engineering is carried on, demands the construction and operation, or engineering works in conformity with the characteristics of the country. These governing characteristics are both physical and human; they depend upon geography, climate and natural resources and above all, upon the habits and customs of the people in their tradecycles and requirements of life and business.

"Canada has conditions and requirements which are peculiar to the country in all these respects Canadian engineering has, therefore, become and has remained distinctive and has definitely acquired its own qualities and characteristics.

"The initiative and resourcefulness demanded by Canadian conditions, have stimulated this independence and have developed the types of practice in the country. Canadian engineering is consequently recognized as having a large influence upon the different phases of the country's activities and business. It has been, and is, a valuable factor also upon the social, the economic and the political life of the nation, for no new country can grow in such a rapid manner, especially under modern conditions, without demanding and receiving the highest form of scientific direction in its development. This is recognized by the attention paid in Canada to high standards of education to provide the human resources with which to develop the material resources.

"To indicate this influence on the country's development through the last 30 or 40 years, certain fields are prominent in which special engineering progress has been made and in which Canada has attracted attention from other nations.

"The agricultural industry claims first position Canada is, and for many decades to come will be, an agriculturist country and its exportable wheat will continue to form a large part of the world's supply. The significant feature today consists of the rapid change now going over the industry by the mechanized farm equipment which has rapidly been replacing man and animal labor. This turning point means the re-entry of the mechanical engineer in a new and much larger way. In the storage and milling of grain, Canada has also gained a distinction both in diverse prairie storage and in a busy five seven million bushel terminal elevators, products also of the mechanical engineer. With a total Canadian wheat crop in 1928 of 540,000,000 bushels, with 360,000,000 storage capacity in the country, 150 being at lake and ocean ports and with yearly exports reversing from 250 to 300 million bushels, Canadians are accustomed to think in high terms per capita in production and export.

"In land transportation the two railway systems having three transcontinental routes with a total of over 45,000 miles of line, are now considered none too extravagant and indeed there have still been adding hundreds of miles of branch line the past few years. It is of interest to observe that the government owned railway is a distinct success in its operating and financial aspects.

"Water transportation on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence river, has grown a fresh in recent years until, in 1928, the traffic through the Welland and St. Lawrence canals has practically reached the limit of their capacity. A new Welland canal, 25 miles long, between Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, under construction the past 13 years, will by opened this year. This provides locks 800 feet long and 80 feet wide with 30 feet of water, and engineering work second in size only to the Panama Canal. Similar construction of the link still remaining to connect the lakes with the sea, now with canals down the St. Lawrence only 14 feet deep, is at present under consideration by the government of Canada and the United States and will doubtless become one of the next great public works to be undertaken.

"The development of forest resources has been an outstanding feature of the past decade and the rapid rise of the paper industry has already been referred to as "the miracle of paper". It has now become Canada's second largest industry in point of value of exports and has called upon the civil, mechanical, chemical, and electrical power to combine in its activities

"The mining industry is not much more than 30 years old, but has already drawn world attention to Canada's output of gold, silver, nickel and copper. A feature of economic significance is the nature and wide area of the pre-Cambrian Shield extending from Labrador to Saskatchewan, which geologists say an actual mining has already demonstrated, contains practically all these provinces and economic minerals in great quantity.

"It is by its wealth in water power, however, that Canada is gaining what is probably its most notable secondary. To it directly and indirectly can be traced not only marked industrial and economic development but in a large measure social and cultural advancement as well, for, with cheap and plentiful power readily available to every home in the city or on the farm, exist ence promptly reacts for its betterment. The total water power installed in Canada today is 9,700,000 H.P., and is at a rate of six tenths of a horse power per inhabitant. Notable in existing developments is the very successful pulp and paper industry which Still more notable however, will be the forthcoming power developments on the St. Lawrence River, Canada's interest in this river assures new power when developed, of upwards of three and a half million horse power."

LONDON MEMORIALS TO ONLY 14 WOMEN

London, April 7.—For six centuries now women have been honored by the erection of memorials in the London streets and yet, so sparingly has the tribute been yielded, Mrs. Pankhurst is only the 14th woman deemed worthy of this seal of fame.

"Those six centuries" are reckoned from the time when King Edward I erected at Charing Cross the ninth of the line of crosses, which marked the progress to Westminster Abbey of the funeral cortege of that chery reine Queen Eleanor. We may add another 1000 years if we go back to Boadicea, but it is scarcely 30 years since Thornycroft's colossal group was actually set up beneath the shadow of Big Ben's tower. It is not without its virtues, the statue of the Amazon Queen of Iceni should stand so near to that of Mrs. Pankhurst, a modern woman leader of revolt.

The Charing Cross memorial has claim to little greater antiquity, erected as it was in 1863, to perpetuate the memory of Sir Eleanor Cross, which, with St. Paul's Cross and others, was destroyed by order of the Long Parliament. To find the oldest surviving statue of a woman we must pass from the Strand to Fleet-street, and there in a niche above the vestry door of St. Dunstan's-in-the-West, is to be seen Queen Elizabeth in voluminous farthingale and sceptre. This figure, which once stood at the Old Ludi Gate, a little way down the street, is the oldest statue in London. Recently it has been cleaned of grime, a restoration made possible by the assistance of Dame Millicent Fawcett.

The last London monument to a Queen is a tribute to Queen Alexandra and stands behind London hospital.

The first non-royal woman deemed worthy of a London memorial was Mrs. Siddons, who, as the tragic muse, may been seen on Paddington Green. Those two heroic Victorian ladies, Florence Nightingale and Grace Darling, are both commemorated, the first in front of The Guards' Memorial, in Waterloo-place, the other in a little known monument by the Gloucester Gate entrance to Regents Park Perhaps the best known and probably least-liked of the statues to women is the Nurse Cavell Memorial. Of all of them, there is no doubt that the happiest is the charming Margaret Macdonald Memorial in Lincoln's Inn. Another fine piece of work is the dainty bust set up in a Bloomsbury square to Dame Aldrich Bake, pioneer among women doctors. It was the last woman's memorial to be unveiled.

Miller's Worm Powders not only mask the bilious system untenable for worms, but by their action on the stomach, liver and bowels they correct such troubles as lack of appetite, biliousness and other internal disorders that the worms create. Children thrive upon them and no matter what condition their worm-infested stomachs may be in, they will show improvement as soon as the treatment begins

PLANT CHIEFS ATTEND COURSE

Hazil Doolittle, plant chief for this district of the Bell Telephone Company, left for Ottawa today for a two weeks course of instruction. While he is absent from the city Mr. E. R. Hicks, chief at the Picton office, will be in charge. These classes of instruction are held periodically in order that all plant chiefs have first hand information of any new equipment that is placed into the system. The Bell Telephone Company advances wages sometimes and the plant chiefs having control of the mechanics are required to have complete knowledge.

TRAIN CUTS HOSE LAID BY FIREMEN

JACKSON, Mich., April 5—Smoke was rolling from the W. G. Kimball house as the Jackson Fire Department, sirens shrieking and bells clanging, dashed upon the scene.

Quickly the hose was laid, orders were given smoothly, firemen swarmed upon the roof with their axes, and the huge pumper was started. Everything was in readiness for another victorious battle by the Jackson fire department.

"Turn on the water," called the Chief.

And then a freight train roared down the right of way, right over the hose, which the firemen had laid across the tracks, and the W. G. Kimball house burned down.

No matter how deep-rooted the cough may be, it must yield to Holloway's Corn Remover if used as directed.

INTEREST GROWS IN OCEANOLOGY

Buffalo Museum to Conduct Scientific Surveys This Summer

Buffalo, N. Y., April 7—The eyes of two governments not to mention those of the scientific world, will be on two groups of workers from the suffalo Museum of science conducting scientific surveys at two widely separated spots on the Atlantic coast.

One group working in conjunction with scientists from the Mount Desert Island biological laboratory and from Brown University will continue the study of biological, chemical and physical conditions in the Gulf of Maine which it started last summer. Another group, including scientists from Princetown University, will make a similar study of conditions at Andros Island in the Bahamas.

Announcing the projects for this year, Dr. Charles J. Fish, director of the museum, stressed the fact that too often an institution attempts to participate in too many fields and ends by finding its funds inadequate for the completion of its investigations. In order to avoid such a difficulty, the museum has selected two major subjects for research, oceanology and anthropology.

Outstanding among achievements of scientists from the Buffalo Museum in the past are a biological survey of Lake Erie, a Bermuda expedition, made possible through the courtesy of Dr. William Beebe; the Princeton-Buffalo expedition to the West Indies; analysis of biological and physiochemical data collected on the recently destroyed ship, "Carnegie"; field work at Woods Hole, Mass., and last season's co-operative survey of the Gulf of Maine.

Collections at the museum have been supplemented by valuable data and material obtained in several other oceanographic expeditions, among them the Beebe "Arcturus" expedition. The expedition headed by Rear Admiral Richard E. Byrd, which is on its way home from the Antarctic, also carried out oceanographic work for the Buffalo Museum and is expected to bring back valuable information and collections from the little known regions of the Antarctic for the museum.

The Gulf of Maine expedition last summer made 238 hydrographic observations and collected 90 specimens of microscopic creatures from water at both the surface and bottom of the ocean. This work will be conducted this year and carried out by a larger number of co-operating institutions. Dr. Fish expressed a hope that the expedition would be able to lower the area between Cases and Passamaquoddy Bays, an area which includes the richest fishing grounds in the entire Gulf of Maine, including the centers of the sardine or herring industry of the Atlantic coast.

The herring fishery, with its tremendous importance to that part of the country, Dr. Fish pointed out, may be seriously affected by the erection of a proposed dam in Passamaquoddy Bay, and both the American and Canadian governments are deeply concerned over the possible effect. It was thought advisable therefore, he explained, to determine the physical, chemical and biological changes that might take place after the erection of the dam.

Worms feed upon the vitality of children and endanger their lives. A simple and effective remedy is Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator.

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

"Of course it's wrong!" his voice broke. "But what can I do, it's that, keeping her alive. How can I wipe that look off her face. Dying—she is! All my fault—I know. I refuse to take things; she asked . . . Oh, I can't! I will have killed her—you see that."

She could not believe it. This was some dreadful dream which would pass OH, it couldn't be true!...

She whimpered. Pawed at him. "Ken Don't let me go! Don't! I love you so!"

He snatched her to him. Buried his face in her hair so that his voice came muffled.

"What can I do, God, what can I do? I love you—more than anything in life, I love you. We belong to each other! But—she's dying! What can I do?"

She heard a small voice whispering —a small, tired voice, which she did not recognize as her own. "I think I'll die, too. I don't want to live without you."

She could feel his body shaking. She put up a hand and touched his face. It was wet.

Touched suddenly with frantic pity, she became the comforter. "Oh, darling! darling, don't! No—no—Ken dar-ling!"

Tortured by Love

Pressing him wildly in her arms, wet cheek against wet cheek. Tortured by her love.

After a few moments Ken got control of himself. His chest rose in a long sigh. Gently he put her aside and started the engine, moving slowly like a very old man.

At the swing of the motor a little moan broke from Ardeth.

"Oh, no!" This couldn't be the end! It couldn't!

His voice was very tired. "Must, dear. I don't dare stay away any longer. She's so low. . . . I shouldn't have left—but I had to make sure. I couldn't let you . . . just find out."

The dark little path developed behind them. Deserted city streets stretching ahead. A dark distance low . . . just a little while and Ken would be lost to her forever. Oh—it was unbelievable! Sitting beside him like this. It was like waiting for death. Helpless . . .

Watching the end draw closer.

She was crying softly, slumped in a forlorn little heap in a corner seat. Ken thought she had heard him sick with misery. For a wild moment its comfort—then she sat up straight and shouting that he didn't mean it; that he couldn't—was give him up. In a wild moment he felt the insane impulse to jump out of the car. Then it —down toward the dark bay. To drive off into eternity—sopping plunge—cold death together. Better than life apart perhaps. Oh, that was crazy, of course—weak. Here—all himself for-gotten. Make it harder for her, Then Loneliness

He stopped the car before her hotel and turned his white face upon her. "You'd better get out, Ardeth. I have to get back."

She unclasped her frantic fingers, feeling that he tore his own heart as he did so. Feeling the salt of her tears in his mouth as he whispered, "Good-by, darlin'. I love you. Remember that won't you. I love you."

Like a released wild thing the car darted away and the light swerving around the corner while she stood there tearful gaze after it.

Dropping her head toward the lighted entrance of the hotel, careless of who might see . . . Back in her own room, vague as to how she got there.

Her room lamp still ablaze, filling the small space with a diet mellowness. Bedclothes tossed back as she had flung them when the phone rang. Only a short time ago, yet in this short time her heart had been broken.

A madness of grief descending upon her so that she sat on the edge of the couch, writhing her hands, making little soft animal noises of pain. Oh, it wasn't possible that Ken was really lost to her!

APPLE-TREE BORER CONTROL

The Round headed Apple-Tree Borer is an orchard pest which is causing losses of economic importance in Quebec, and one of which should be watched for wherever apples are grown. For seven years now the Entomological Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture have been studying this orchard pest and find that the wisest way to control it now as the larva which does most of the boring may be a year or more old before its presence is detected; in consequence the best prospects are to be some help, the mounding of young trees in nurseries is desirable, wire wrappers around the base of the trunk high, many years are of some use, but the most practicable and effective method is to apply a paste of raw linseed oil and calcium carbide with a brush to the parts of the tree where castings from borings are found. This mixture should be applied under favorable conditions from June 25 to June 3. The mixture will not injure the trees.

Acadians Plan Big Pilgrimage for September

BOSTON, April 7—On next September 6, Boston will welcome the descendants of the Acadians, who in 1775 sought sanctuary in the southwestern section of Louisiana.

Headed by Dudley Leblanc the party, to number of 300, will pass through the city en route to Grand Pre, Nova Scotia, to help celebrate the 175th anniversary of the Acadian upheaval.

They will travel partly by automobile and partly by train, so that leaders in the movement can map out the proposed Longfellow-Evangeline National Trail, which will extend from the Grand Pre Valley through Boston and New York into Louisiana.

Most of the Acadians travelling north ward, will be from St. Martinville, called "St. Mar" in the poet's immortal story, where sleeps the original of his "Evangeline." At St. Martinville is the grave of Emmaline Labiche, the girl whose story the poet told in the world's most beloved poem.

Those making the pilgrimage to the land of their great grandfathers will tell the story that there was no happy ending to the story of Emmaline Labiche, but that she died of a broken heart when she learned that her lover had wed another.

New Brunswick has an estimated population of 415,000, according to the twelfth annual report of the chief medical officer of the provincial department of health tabled in the Legislature recently. An interesting detail of the report was the statement that during the past year more than 25,000 persons had been permanently immunized against diphtheria.

Surest sign of spring in Eastern Canada is the running of the sap in the maple trees. This annual harvest is now on and last year the total value of maple sugar and maple syrup produced in Canada was $8,118,656. This money accrues mostly to farmers and the province of Quebec is the leader of the industry in Canada.

TO OPEN ZOOS ONCE MORE ON SUNDAYS

London, April 5—There seems little likelihood that the renewed efforts now being made to secure the opening of the Zoological Gardens to the public on Sundays will prove successful. Probably the prominence which has been given to the efforts of Hon. Cosmo Lansbury, first Commissioner of Works, to "democratize" the Royal Parks, by the provision of such diversions as bathing in the Serpentine, are in part responsible for the agitation for the Sabbath opening of the Zoo.

The Zoological Society holds its premises in Regents Park on a yearly tenancy from the Crown, and it is suggested that the Government should make Sunday opening a condition of the renewal of the tenancy.

In support of the arguments against Sunday opening it is submitted that the animals would get no rest if the gardens were open to the public every day. There are 8,000 fellows of the Zoological Society, who subscribe £15 yearly apiece, and who regard Sunday as their own visiting day. They are allowed 40 tickets each for friends, which means that in the course of a year 400,000 people can be admitted on Sundays. To admit more, it is assert ed, would mean the overcrowding of the gardens.

The "Zoo" which is one of the most popular sights of London with the old say young, has been established by Regents Park for just over a century.

THE SHAPE OF CANADA'S SURFACE

It is not generally known that the surface of the earth is the "true" form is approximately thirteen miles closer to the centre of the earth than is the surface at the equator. In Canada the form of the surface is determined by the triangulation and traverse of the Geodetic Survey of Canada, a department of the Interior, which makes scientific investigations to determine the nature of the dip of the surface as it goes North so as to allow for the thirteen miles shortage in the earth's polar radius. The use of traverse in triangulation of Canada to assist in determining the shape and form of Canada's surface, which is of course neither plane nor spherical, has resulted in much investigational research.

SPECIAL SERVICE

London, April 7—On Dominion Day this year it is intimated he had a special service commemorative of the anniversary at the Church of St. Mary-le-Bow; The Rector, the Rev. Gordon Peacocke, is arranging the details. The preacher will be the Archbishop of Regina, Saskatchewan, and the Lord Mayor of London and the Sheriffs will attend in State.

Australians in London have for some years attended service on Australia Day. Canada has not hitherto made such a feature of its own commemoration in the past, with the exception of Dominion Day in 1917 when the 50th anniversaries respectively of Confederation when there were notable services at Westminster Abbey.

GEO. NICOLSON DIES AT HOME IN SIDNEY TP.

He Was Born 82 Years Ago in the Township of Madoc

PROMINENT DAIRYMAN

Was Held in Highest Esteem By All Classes of the Community

George Nicolson of the fifth concession of Sidney, one of the best known agriculturists in Hasting Co., died on Monday after being suddenly stricken with a heart affection. He had not enjoyed the best of health but on rising yesterday was feeling in normal condition and was eating his breakfast when he felt unwell. A doctor was called. His passing was so sudden that his son who was out in the bush had no time to reach home before he had expired.

The late George Nicolson was 82 years of age and a native of the township of Madoc. He spent his early life there and about fifty years ago removed to the township of Sidney where he had bought a farm on the fifth concession 3 miles west of and all the rest of his life.

Mr. Nicolson followed the occupation of farming as his one calling in life. His enthusiasm for agriculture brought him to be leader in the industry in this part of the province. During his life in Sidney township he touched every phase of life and left the better for his service. He was a prominent dairyman, served on the cheese board for over thirty years, was a past president of the Belleville Cheese Board, and was president of the Sidney Cheese Factory at the time of his death. His business dealings in the dairy industry were always of a kind to reveal his high sense of business integrity.

He served as reeve of the township of Sidney for some time and gave to that office his best. He was a member of the school board at Wallbridge for years. He was president of the Prankford Agricultural Society. In the Presbyterian church he had been an elder and a tireless worker.

In politics he was a Liberal.

Mourning his death are his widow, formerly Miss Mary Ann McKenzie of Madoc, two sons, Donald of Wilmington and Sam of Sidney, two daughters, Mrs. W. Tucker of Belleville and Mrs. K. Campbell of Toronto, three brothers, Samuel of Sidney, James of Belleville and Angus and one sister, Mrs. MacGillivray of Warton. He was a member of the Oddfellows.

The funeral will take place on Thursday afternoon leaving the house at two o'clock for Wallbridge United Church for service. Burial will be made in the Prankford Cemetery.

The late Mr. Nicolson was in the city on Saturday last appearing in his usual health.

He was an indefatigable worker and was enthusiastic beyond measure. That will explain why he was so highly honored by those of every activity with whom he came in contact. Honorable and open-hearted he lived a life of activity and his every action was mark ed by high self-esteem. He will be mourned by many in all parts of the Bay of Quinte section.

Mr. Allen Elliott retired manager of the Standard Bank here received the news of Mr. Nicolson's death with a decided feeling of regret. Mr. Elliott numbered the late George Nicolson among his friends. Mr. Elliott had been closely associated with the cheese industry and he came in contact with him many times.

Speaking with the Ontario Intelligencer this morning he said: "I well known Mr. Nicolson for the past twenty-three years and in my estimation he was one of the leading, reliable and aggressive farmers in the Bay of Quinte district. He was respected by all and he served with distinction as President of the Cheese Board." Mr. Elliott feels that he has lost a sincere and honorable friend with Mr. Nicolson's passing. The members of the Cheese Board spoke feelingly of the death of this well-known resident of Sidney Township.

TRAVELLER HURT IN MOTOR SMASH

George Gray of Deseronto Is Injured When Car Crashed Ditch

NAPANEE, April 8—Swerving to avoid the road to avoid striking two pedestrians, George Gray, a commercial traveller, of Deseronto, was unable to right his car again, with the result that it crashed into the ditch and he was seriously injured, being taken to the Kingston General Hospital suffering from several broken ribs and other injuries.

The accident occurred west of Napanee on Saturday night as Mr. Gray was driving home. He pulled to the side to avoid the pedestrians but when he tried to right the car on to the main part of the highway he lost control long enough to find the car crashing into a ditch, where it was almost completely wrecked. Dr. Willoughby of Napanee, was summoned, and found that Mr. Gray had sustained six broken ribs and a punctured lung. He was taken to the Kingston General Hospital where today he was reported as doing nicely.

Provincial Constables Barrett, Byles and Lloyd were early on the scene and investigated the accident.

Hounded by Famine Parents Eat Children

(Canadian Press)

PEIPING, China, April 8.—Reports received here by China International Relief Commission say that so terrible have famine conditions become in the Wei River district that in some cases parents have eaten their children. 600 POUND INGOT OF PURE COPPER

OTTAWA, Ont., April 8—By the Canadian Press—Out of Canada's great northern copper field in the Coronation Gulf district there will come this summer a 600 pound nugget of native copper which will be added to the exhibits of the National Museum here. The nugget was found by Major L. T. Burwash, of the Yukon and Northwest Territories branch of the Department of the Interior on an island last year.

The "find" made on Husky Creek, about six miles west of the Coppermine river, near Coronation Gulf. Since the early days in Canada stories of huge deposits of copper in the Coppermine River district have drifted out to civilization. Early in the Great War the government, with the definite knowledge of a large copper field in there, passed a restriction prohibiting prospecting and filing of claims in the area. This restriction will be lifted July 1 this year and already several exploration companies have started for Coronation Gulf to be on hand when the "rush" for claims begin.

When he found the nugget, Major Burwash carved his initials "L. T. B." on it and made arrangements to have it taken by dog-sled to Coronation Gulf during the past winter. From the latter place it will be brought to Ottawa by boat and rail.

SENT TO PRISON FOR FIVE YEARS CARRIED WEAPON

Aftermath of Arrest in Toronto By the Detective Squad

TWO MEN FREED

Swift Justice Given Prisoner Captured After Chase

TORONTO, April 8—Pleading guilty to a charge of carrying offensive weapons, Albert E. Dorland, former inmate of the Portsmouth Penitentiary, was today sentenced to five years in that institution. The charge was preferred against him instead of a previous charge of conspiring to rob a bank. Charges of vagrancy against Ernest Bird, Hamilton, and another man given the name of Charles Gordon were withdrawn, and they were allowed their freedom.

Dorland and Gordon were arrested by the detective squad yesterday after the police had blocked in a motor car down which they were driving, perumably, police said, on their way to rob a bank. Dorland, who was driving crashed his machine into the police vehicle in attempt to force passage to the open road. Bird was brought from Hamilton last night following the questioning of the other two men.

TORONTO, April 8—Out of scores of false alarms this week-end, one from the underworld to warn police of plans of bank robberies, one yesterday turned out to be redress.

It produced a sensational attempt by the reputed would-be gunmen to ram a police car full of detectives on Bloor street. The latter replied with shots from the detectives' revolvers which made crowds spring up by magic in the main east-bound traffic artery, and flee in all directions. The bandits being shot through the head and a detective was injured in the leg by the ramming automobile.

In consequence of extensive plans by police detectives to frustrate a reported project to rob the Royal Bank branch at Church and Wellesley Sts., three men were in the toils of the police on charges of being concerned to rob and with carrying offensive weapons.

One was arrested in Hamilton last night after he had failed to meet his alleged confederates in Toronto, and Toronto police headquarters had asked police all the way from here to Niagara Falls to pick him up on sight.

A police flier roared over the highway to Hamilton and back again in the record time of one hour and 40 minutes, in order to bring Ernest Bird, 24, to the prisoners, lodged in Hamilton last night. The car was guided by Driver Pringle and Bird remained in custody of Detectives Fred Skinner and Arthur Slaney. Half an hour after midnight, Bird was at headquarters together with Gordon and Dorland and was being questioned separately by his fellow prisoners. Bird was not questioned at all yesterday, according to advices from Hamilton.

Bird was arrested at his boarded on Wellesley Street, just each of Church, after detectives said the alleged bandits had simultaneously spied each other.

Fashionably Speaking

Long tresses or short? Here is an interesting problem, dear readers, which I know you will be willing to discuss. You know it's a funny thing but if someone were to ask you which of the two styles you preferred you would likely answer just the opposite to that you are wearing. Of course, this is just human nature, "always wanting what is not", but seriously speaking, after looking up the opinions of fashion dictators on this much discussed question, I find that after all, long tresses do not occupy the centre of the stage, and that at the recent Hairdressers' Convention held in Toronto, one single mannequin only had honest-to-goodness long hair. Now then, I suppose you will naturally come to the conclusion that the short bob reigns supreme in the world of fashion, and again I must answer no." The fashion that reigns supreme is neither long nor short but just in-between. And it is a charming

WHO PLANTS A TREE

Who plants a tree in the ground below
That it in time may skyward grow,

Are climbing upward patiently:
Expectant, confident, although
The growth is very still and slow,

A speedy, selfish gain, is he

Spring after spring the sap will flow
Small twigs stretch out and up, till
A twofold marvel there will be
Of beauty and utility.
Such consummation may he know

Oh, oh, as Amos would say, there is a point in the answer, and a good one too. Men do prefer long hair, but then this young lady has not yet learned that she can have the 'crowning glory' her boy friends so much admire without having the bother of really long hair. All she has to do is cover with a matching switch, buy a package of hairpins, and presto, when her boy friend calls for her she has as delightful a long-hair-ed coiffure, as her old-fashioned sister, minus the discomfort.

Speculation of the wisdom of buying coats to fit at an end. The value of little jackets is firmly established in the style market. They are backed by the most eminent fashion authorities for formal and informal wear. However, it is still an item to arouse the sporting blood of the outdoor enthusiast. Many models are developed today revealing how diversified in sartorial theme jack ets may be, at the same time obviating the chance of an error on the buyer's part.

Above is a green suede slip-over jacket, suggesting the cape theme with its rounded yoke closed by a metal fastener. The rather full long sleeves are drawn into a narrow tailored band at the wrist. A snug belt adds tailored distinction and the pockets, provide practicality.

That the short lumber jacket is getting ready for Spring activity is apparent by its appearance in models of various fabrics. Here it is fashioned of beige angora with bright blue pin dots. The lining of the jacket is of navy blue which serves to accept the popularity of that color just now.

THE BEAUTY BOX

By HELEN FOLLETT

When will some of our beauteous numbers discover the fact that the bath kills the complexion, dear? It is as done for as the feather boas or the straight front corset. Everywhere are sad again, but they should be stressed into graceful lines, the far ends finishing at a fairly sharp point, the arch being well forward, so that the eyebrow takes on the outline on the bird's wing in flight. Accentions of brilliine provide a glisten, and a nightly brushing trains the hairs to stay put.

We fancy that we get our complexions at the cosmetic counter, but the fact is they come with the groceries What one eats has a certain effect on with the condition of the skin—la colour, its texture, its resistance to cold and heat, stimulation to and weather. In the daily diet should be fruits and vegetables, milk, cereals, fowls, milk, meat and eggs. All these contain vitamines which build tissue cells and enrich the blood.

Underweight doesn't necessarily mean that a girl isn't healthy; as long as she feels well, she needn't worry. But when underweight goes down to a state of awkwardness, it detracts from good looks. The girl with the beautiful figure should take cod liver oil, a teaspoonful three times a day. After each meal she should drink milk and cream, half and half.

Silly to believe that the shade of the complexion powder should match a woman's skin. If she is sallow, she doesn't want a sallow powder, but a dark, rich suntan shade that will hide the ivory-pallery of her own colourless facial covering. Only darker shades conceal defects.

SOLDIERS WIDOW TO BE CARED FOR

Suggestions For Alleviating Distress Laid Before the Ottawa Committee

Ottawa, April 8—The situation of the widows of ex-soldier pensioners was considered by the Special Parliamentary Committee on Returned Soldiers' Problems Monday afternoon, and a number of suggestions aimed at alleviating distress among those women were framed by Lieut.-Col. L. A. Le Pioche, D.S.O., and Richard Myers of Toronto. The latter represented the Amputations Association. In advocating that a soldier's pension be continued to his widow on the death of the pensioner, Colonel La Pioche argued that since the law had for twenty years banned such a procedure, and since in that time many soldiers had married, it was proper to assume that those women had not married in expectation of pension.

Several amendments in the present act were pointed out by Mr. Myers.

Colonel La Pioche recommended that Section 32, Subsection 1 of the Pensions Act be repealed, and the following enacted:

"That no pension shall be paid to the widow of a pensioner unless she was living with him or was maintained by him, or was in the opinion of the Commission, entitled to be maintained by him, at the time of his death and for a reasonable time previously thereto.

"No pension shall be paid to the widow of a member of the forces unless she was married to him before the appearance of the injury or disease which caused his death.

"(a) Unless she was married to him before the date of the coming into force of this act, he, a member of the forces is able to obtain from the Commission a certificate to the effect that he has a reasonable expectation of life."

After a delectable supper had been partaken of Mrs. Ralph Morden, president of the Circle, expressed the pleasure it gave to meet in the parsonage and with the W.M.S. in a social way. The main features of the evening provided by the Circle, were a letter from Miss Hawkins, missionary at Moulmein and an address by Mrs. (Rev.) Sexsmith. Before her marriage, Mrs. Sexsmith spent some years at Mowe House and gave story of the life of the Indian boys and girls in that institution as well as incidents in connection with the establishment of the mission there were intensely interesting. In a very lilty speech, Miss L. Brown moved a vote of thanks to Mrs. Sexsmith, Dr. and Mrs. Neil and the W.M.S. The Mizpah benediction closed the meeting.

POLICE COURT

After several weeks of remand, young man from Point Anne appeared in court today, charged with a serious offence against a girl under the age of sixteen years. As there was no corroboration of the girl's story, the young man was dismissed of the charge and also that in freedom. J. B. Collins appeared for the accused and B. C. Donnan for the prosecution. The offence was alleged to have been committed on May 5th of last year and evidence was given in court, that the young man was at the home of the girl on the day in question, but there was no evidence of any offence except that given by the girl. The evidence was so light that Mr. Collins did not place the young man in the box on his own behalf. The magistrate advised the court that the young man should not be convicted with the evidence at hand.

The father of the girl was in court and stated after the proceedings were closed that the girl could not return to his home. Mr. Donnan made it clear to the parent that the girl was under age and would have to be supported with her charge until she was eighteen years old or over. "Either the girl from your home you will be facing a serious charge another time," said Mr. Donnan. The girl then wished the child in the case to be given over to the Children's Shelter, but Mr. Donnan thought Mr. Runtion of the Children's Aid Society stated the child could not become a ward unless it had reached one year of age.

SNOW FLURRIES.

Yesterday, April 7th, brought with it a low temperature and a flurry of snow, to remind that although the spring season is here, and weather is by no means through. The snow must have come late in the night or early in the morning hours as citizens woke up to find it sprinkled on their lawns and sidewalks. It melted and disappeared shortly after daybreak. A snow flurry in April is not a novelty, nor yet a record, as it will be remembered that the years ago Sunday, April 15th, 1925, one of heavies snow storms of the year visited Belleville and vicinity.

RADIO FANS CORNER

Didn't see anything to kick about in the reception we had last night did you, fans? Thought it was pretty good myself but I may be wrong.

Had a dandy time at the zoning meeting at Thomkins Corners last night and you were enjoying your favorite waltz too, oh yes I saw you there. Quite a little discussion over the zoning law was heard during the "meeting" last night and everybody had their say. Mail's store was filled to overflowing but that was a minor detail.

Everybody loves organ music and especially we Lew White plays it so tonight we have a treat in store for you. Lew white is giving a recital at 7.30 over WJZ and CHICAGO and we're sorry it also so everybody will be able to tune in.

WEAF carries a number of good programs tonight beginning at 8.30 with the Florsheim Frolic featuring the Coon-Sanders orchestra the Night Hawks and can they play, snappy program, talk my advice and don't miss it.

At nine-thirty WEAF we'll hear the Happy Wonder Bakers program and nobody needs to be advised to hear them their reputation of the good programs is well established.

The Radio-Keith Orpheum hour at 10.30 tonight over WEAF holds some very pleasant surprises for us. I hapen to know that Miss Bebe Daniels is going to be on the program and also Mr. Richard Dix of screen fame. Many more stage celebrities are going to present and are we going to make "whoopee" tonight?

The C21 Gold program heard over WASC at 9, and featuring Paul White mans and his orchestra always have something pleasant in store for us so now about taking it in? Several screen and stage stars are appearing on this program too, seems to be a big night for stars hope that means a fine night overhead and clear sailing.

BOARD, COUNCIL CITIZENS JOIN IN BIG TRIBUTE

Collegiate Team Honored At Function Last Night

TEAM SPIRIT WAS PRAISED

Place of Sport in Life of Nation's Youth Is Recognized

Last night one of the largest and best attended civic receptions in years was held in the auditorium of the Belleville Collegiate and each and every member of the hockey team in the Interscholastic series was presented with a beautiful white gold Cronin watch, the finest that money could buy. These more than made up for the loss of the silver medal, emblem safe of the runners up in the province and each of which they were decorated by action of the Ontario Athletic Committee. Coach Mahan, too, was the recipient of a like favour and one will be mailed to Jack Mooney, who was unable to be present. It will be remembered that the success of the local boys was in no small part due to the expert advice of Mr. Mooney.

Scene in Auditorium

Long before eight o'clock last night citizens began flocking into the auditorium at the collegiate, and when the ceremonies opened it was an impressive sight which greeted the eyes of the spectators, seated on the platform first and foremost, was the hockey team, beside that the band of gallants there was assembled such a gathering of notables as is seldom seen in one place hereafter. Headed by Controller Arthur Jones, the Board of Education occupied favoured seats on the platform, and, as well, the city council with Mayor George Hall and nearly every member absent, was present. Besides these there were also celebrities as Mr. John Elliott, ex-chairman of the Board of Education, Mr. Joe Shortt, secretary of the Y.M. C. A., P. Hagerman, Q.C., the much prized speaker for the evening, Principal MacLaurin and many others.

Called out one by one, the players on Belleville's championship hockey team were presented with watches by the mayor. For each boy he had some witty and brilliant remark. The following were recipients of watches—Barrie MacGregor, Edward Jeffery, Harold Bryce, Hilton McKinnon, Jack Graves, Hans St. Denis, Harold Mack, Ralph Champaign, Clifford Bavrage, Jack Cummings, J. Lester Shiels.

A most interesting programme had been arranged. After the meeting proper had been concluded, the guests of honour, the players and officials supper was served to them in the school's cafeteria. Dancing followed later in the evening.

Hockeyists Pay Tribute

Another interesting feature, too, was made last night. This was the presentation from the hockey team to Lou Jones who helped in no small measure to win its crowning glory. D. McLaughlin, principal of the school, and J. Lester Shiels were given fountain pens by grateful members of the team.

The principal speaker of the evening was J. P. Hagerman, of Toronto, a man who is intensely interested in boys' work and is a noted athlete in his own right. Mr. Hagerman spoke last night on the Value of Sport and a few home truths were put before the audience.

Generous With Real Things

"We," he said, "have got to get more generous hearted towards the betterment of Canada's youth. We are prone with things that count in life. Lets get the habit. Your boy probably needs a new bicycle this year, well, get it for him. Equipment must be kept up."

HAD RIGHT TO TRAP FOR RATS

Interesting Case From Salmon River Heard in Court Today

The right to trap muskrats on the Bay Bridge Authority is to be sent Mohawk Indian lands, trapped for muskrats on this river, Mr. C. A. Cameron appeared for Mr. Howard and before evidence was taken, the Crown Attorney assured the court there was not sufficient evidence for a conviction and Howard was dismissed.

The land upon which Howard had set a trap was formally Indian land but by letters patent 250 acres was transferred to the Limestone and Clay Company. These patents included all the marsh lands on the north side of the Salmon River and it was here that Howard had his traps set. Levi Brant, one of the chiefs of the Mohawk tribe was in court to see that justice was done towards his people's but Mr. Donovan convinced Mr. Brant that Howard had a perfect right to trap on the marsh lands on the north bank.

It is supposed that Mr. Mitchell went to the garage, started the engine, some time Sunday night, and sat on the rear bumper and, the warming-up process or else listening to the exhaust, as a mechanic will, for a missing cylinder.

FEROCIOUS RAT ASSAULTED LAW

TRENTON, Onl., April 8—(Special)—The latest in "wild animals" is a man eating rat which was on a rampage and dodged and slaughtered on the main street of Trenton last night. Several youngsters noticed the little animal at first and gave chase. They were joined by Constable Rose and when the rat was finally cornered, the constable flashed his light on him. Quick as a flash the rat turned and made for the constable's hand but although his bravery and luck stood by the latter, the rat got away. Neither of the Law's finger which made medical attention necessary., Short work was then made of the unakrat and later another of its breed, though not so ferocious, was disposed of.

DEATH CERTIFICATE ORDERED CANCELLED

BARRIE, April 8— Following investigations into the circumstances which led to the death of John Wilson, 102-year-old resident of Collingwood, following an automobile accident near Wasaga Beach last Friday, Dr. Evans, Crown Attorney for Simcoe County, yesterday ordered the cancellation of a death certificate issued by Dr. William Little Jr., the attending physician. An inquest will be held here Thursday morning.

Mr. Wilson died in Royal Victoria Hospital here Sunday morning as a result of shock, severe injuries to his head and possible internal injuries sustained when the motor car in which he was riding turned over in loose gravel about three miles south of Collingwood Friday evening. The driver of the car Russell Hamilton, and Albert McPherson, a passenger, both of Barrie, escaped injuries.

BALDWIN SEES OLD POLICY END

At Manchester Urges Business Men to Consider Imperial Rationalism

Manchester, England, April 8—In this great centre of the industrial north, the Rt. Hon. Stanley Baldwin leader of the Conservative party last night preached his two-fold gospel of safeguarding and economic unity with the Empire. And from the platform of Manchester's Free Trade Hall he predicted the doom of free trade.

"The age of free trade is passing," proclaimed Mr. Baldwin, and he added "whether you like it or not."

"Free trade is passing," repeated Mr. Baldwin, "because no free traders are being born today"—a statement which raised laughs and cheers in the crowd of hall. "In ten years" the Conservative leader continued, "the sole representatives of the old policy will be a few old men here and there, relics to the gods of their infancy."

Mr. Baldwin urged Lancashire business men to turn their attention to Imperial rationalism. "Why?" he asked, "should we get together? It doesn't mean the politicians, but the industries. We should get together, industry by industry, and see whether we cannot compare notes, pool our resources and then go hand-in-hand with the whole way, at any rate, get at it were, the first slice of business—over the barnacles of our great Empire for the leaves

WALLACE NESBITT DIES AFTER STROKE

Toronto, April 8.—A long life of service to the business community of Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., who rose from farm boy to Solicitor and one of the greatest legal lights in Canada, passed away at his residence, 265 Warren Road, in his 69th year.

A former Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Nesbitt at the time of his death held the offices of president of the Canadian Bar Association and treasurer of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Last July he was stricken with paralysis while at his home in Muskoka and was examined on an invalid until his death.

He was a leader in the Dominion tributes and messages of sympathy have poured into the residence on Warren Road. The high regard in which the eminent jurist was held was shown at the memorial meeting held on the day of the death of one who had left his imprint on the national life of the Dominion.

DISSATISFIED OVER PARLEY'S PROGRESS

London, April 8.—Dissatisfaction in scattered sections of the House of Commons over the trend of Anglo-French security discussions in connection with the Naval Conference last night resulted in the unanimous and whole question openly, and Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, who is at present in Paris, was called upon to explain the situation.

There were three things to be done, he said, "Help, Raggedness and Parity."

BUTLER RECOGNIZES MAN AFTER 8 YEARS

(Canadian Press)
CLEVELAND, Ohio, April 8— Simon Rosenberg, alias Charles Davis was identified last night by Charles Johnson, butler for Robert W. Cutler, formerly of Oswego, as one of the gang which robbed the Cutler country estate in 1922 during a house party. Johnson who was present during the holdup, said Rosenberg was one of the men who held up Cutler and his guests and locked them in a vault.

COUNCIL SALARY RAISED $30,000

Mayor of Toronto Gets $11,600 and Alderman $1,200

Toronto, April 8—City council raised its own salary by approximately $30,000 per year at 11:30 last night.

With only Alderman Roland and Steward dissenting, approval was given a motion of Alderman Wright and Henderson to provide a general appropriation of annual allowances, to be retroactive to Jan. 1, 1930.

Aldermen will get $4,000 instead of $300 per annum. Controllers are increased from $6,000 to $8,000. Chairmen of committees continue to receive an added allowance of $100.

Mayor Stong, whose salary has been $6,500 as mayor and $3,500 as chairman of the board of control, a total of $10,000, will receive $11,600 as chairman of the board, making the chief magistrate worth $11,600 to the incumbent.

Carried in Two Minutes

At the last moment, when virtually all the business remained to be transacted, the resolution was sprung upon council. It carried in two minutes. Only Alderman Roland objected before the vote was put.

"Those who vote against the increases won't get the benefit of them," Alderman Burnese facetiously admonished council.

The necessary by-law, it transpired was already drafted in official form and was soon given three readings and passed.

Since the change takes effect as of Jan. 1, each Alderman will collect a lump sum of $225 to bring him up to date for the first three months of the year. Each Controller and the Mayor will get an extra cheque of $375 for the first quarter.

The increases total $79 100 per annum. Of this $41,000 goes to aldermen and $12,000 to controllers and the mayor. A total of $8,400 will have to be paid out to bring the members up to the end of March.

HISTORIC FRIGATE TO SAIL THE SEAS

Washington, April 8.—Assurance that "Old Ironsides" again will sail the seas was given today by enthusiastic friends of the historic frigate 'Constitution,' champion of a multiplicity of sea engagements, was reflected with a new ring in its timbers, as it basked in the afternoon navy yard.

The funds for this partial restoration, to the extent of $400,000, were contributed by the school children of the country. The money allotted for the measure approved today is expected to complete the renovation.

A veteran of naval service, the Constitution, armed with more than 50 guns in its whole decks, achieved its first prominence in the destruction of pirate who endangered American shipping years ago on the Barbary coast.

She figured in the War of 1812 and remained on the active list of the navy until the outbreak of the Spanish-American War days. Retired, she lay rotting at pier in the Boston navy yard, a mere sentiment crystallized for her restoration.

DEATHS AND FUNERALS

DEATH OF
BENJAMIN WILSON

Benjamin A. Wilson, of Wooler, passed away very suddenly this morning. He was around as usual when he was suddenly stricken with heart failure and passed away within a short time. He was seventy-three years of age and a member of the United Church. He is survived by one sister Mrs. Jane Shaw in New York City, and one daughter, Mrs. Arthur Bell of Wooler.

HOUDE SWEEPS MONTREAL CITY

Supporters Confident Total Aldermanic Following Will Reach 60

Montreal, April 8.—Mayor Camillien Houde was returned to office in the civic elections Monday with a majority of 41,834 over his only opponent Alderman J. A. Adamson, who had his deposit. Not only was Mayor re-elected with an overwhelming majority, but at least 15 aldermanic candidates who had pledged themselves to support the mayor in his campaign to oust the clique at city hall, were successful.

Supporters of Mayor Houde estimated that enough aldermen, an addition to those who had publicly promised their support, would ultimately follow the Houde policies to give him at least 22 seats of the 35 in the city council. This was the figure that Mayor Houde considered necessary before returns had been completed.

Alderman Mathewson, the majority's whip out of the 33 wards, that being in St. Louis.

The election count for the night in the mayoralty contest gave Houde 78,317 votes and Mathewson 36,483. Alderman Adamson, who had been nominated for the mayoralty, but publicly announced three days after he had been placed on the ballot papers, received 2,000 votes. There were four small polls to hear from.

WORK PARLEY TO BE CALLED SOON

Provinces Called to Conference in June, Stewart Tells House

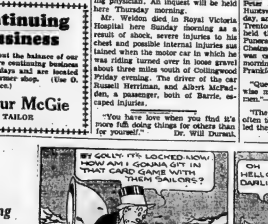
Ottawa, April 8.—Immigration and unemployment will be the subjects at the conference of provincial premiers at which the C.P.R. and C.N.R. presidents and others of the railway executive will attend, to be held in Ottawa early in June, Hon. Charles Stewart, minister of the interior announced in the House of Commons.

Mr. Stewart called attention to discuss the new immigration scheme under which the provinces will designate the number of each nationality of the immigrants they annually desire, the conference to be over. Each Government will conduct a thorough canvass of the question of winter unemployment and how to circumvent it.

Construction work and other activities could be done as easily in winter as in summer and a little extra cost, said Mr. Stewart. While he clung to the Government's refusal to share any extra cost, he suggested that provinces and municipalities enact legislation to have each nationality of immigration and urged large employers of labor such as railways, to do their part by spending half their year's construction expenditures if winter.

Mr. Stewart in his wish an appeal for a non-political discussion of unemployment and a recital of all that the King Government claims to have done for the provinces, Mr. Stewart's announcement was received generally here as the administration's attempt to take the sting out of Premier King's defeat outburst against Conservative provincial governments last week.

RALLY IN TRENTON



TRENTON, April 8.—A general rally has been arranged to open the new Trenton Theatre next Thursday night. M. Richardson is President and H. N. Cory, is Secretary. The speakers will be Mr. J. Hepburn, M.P., for East West, Major W. A. Fraser, Charles Hanna and others.

NOTED NOVELIST DIES AFTER LINGERING FIGHT

LONDON, April 8—A man who has known the bitter struggle against poverty and the oft-recurring recil bill, who had been a private soldier, a reporter, a war correspondent, and, finally, a writer of many "thrillers" has now decided to turn his hand to the political game.

That man is Edgar Wallace, the noted novelist. It has been announced that Mr. Wallace will stand in the Liberal interest, in a Buckinghamshire constituency at the next election. When the election does come, his fight will be watched with particular interest by those interested in this and other Anglo-Saxon countries, for the author of "The Ringer," "The Terror," "The Squealer" and many other plays and stories can be expected to provide a colorful contest and plenty of "copy."

Edgar Wallace was born in 1875.

BERG IS GIVEN DECISION OVER JACKIE PHILLIPS

Toronto Boy Goes Route Although Severely Punished by English Fighter

IS FISTIC FREAK

Jack "Kid" Berg, the London, Eng., lad, who holds the world's junior welterweight title, is a fistic freak.

Never before in the history of boxing in the city have local fans seen a lad in action who is as active with his hands. For ten rounds last night Berg threw gloves from all directions and angles and almost with the regularity of a steam-riveter at Jackie Phillips, the Canadian welterweight champion, and the chances are the local lad will be seeing and ducking gloves for some days to come. Berg was hailed as one Englishman who would fight and the title does not belie him in the ring except that he apparently is afraid to fight. At the start of each of the ten rounds he was across the ring and within eight feet of Phillips' corner ready to start the action and once his little-got under way there was but few moments of inaction and these when Referee Marsh stepped in between the lads to separate them. They would no sooner be broken than they would be at it again and almost in ways it was hard to say who the aggressor.

As far as the bout was concerned Berg won and by a big margin. In fact, after the half-way mark, the decision for the fans was whether Phillips would go the route or last and he did last during the ten rounds but absorbed one of the most severe punishments that has been handed out in this city for a long time. While defeated by a big margin, Phillips gained instead of lost by his display during the engagement. The local boy, who took on the bout on comparatively short notice and without a proper warm-up nearly two months, gave a display of gameness that was one of the features of the bout, the other being the perpetual aggressiveness of the winner.

Berg a Fighter Only

Berg is a fighter, pure and simple He may know a little boxing ability but it is lost in the ultra-aggressiveness of the Whitechapel, who in the ring is totally different in his actions than when in his street clothes. Out of the ring he is a mild mannered soft spoken lad of a retiring nature but once the gong sounds he is like a shined piece of fighting machinery. His legs are driven here, his body twisted into a ball smart and with wide eyes he closes in on his opponent. When the latter has the opponent in difficulty, the lust of the till becomes apparent, but he has not the knockout punch that is expected in a lad who has such a fighting temperament. He hits fairly hard, mainly short sharp jabs that shake and cut but a couple of times he seemed to have Phillips on the verge of a knockout, but he could not terminate the engagement.

He is a punishing hitter or puncher, Phillips' face and body gave ample proof of that and as early as the first round he had the local boy marked by a cut left eye and a bleeding nose and the damage he bore from then on became more apparent as the bout progressed. His left eye became completely closed about the ninth round and from his right started to close until Phillips about the ninth round and from his right started to close until Phillips about the end, had a decided Oriental appearance. What Berg lacks in the power of his punches he made up for by the number he threw and lands.

SHIKAT THROWS M. KARILENKO

New York, April 5.—Richard Shikat recognized in New York and Pennsylvania as world's heavyweight wrestling champion, threw Matros Karilenko of Russia a controversial fall and held after 40 minutes and 5 seconds, of wrestling last night.

Karilenko was a last-minute substitute for Terrence Holohun, Hungarian wrestler, but gave Shikat a terrific battle in their previous match. Holohun telegraphed that he was sick and unable to appear for the bout.

"You can never supplant judgment by regulations, for it is only through experience that we learn."

On the Sport Trail

Jackie "Kid" Berg gave Jack Phillips an artistic lacing over the ten round route at the Coliseum last night in Toronto and apparently a few more bouts can take the class of junior lightweights on this side of the water. Berg is a Hebrew boy, but there was a large following of boys from across the water to show him the effort was appreciated. This Jewish lad is a fighting fool, and a two fisted lad, who never stops trying. He will see the end of the rainbow as this country and refire to 40 English pounds before he leaves here and some time will wander down to Piccadilly and Leicester Square to give the boys a thrill. Berg made a distinct impression in his first appearance before the boys a thrill. Berg made a distinct impression in his first appearance before the boys a thrill. The sun, scorching and pitiless, beat down upon three travellers encircled beside a disabled, flivver. Except for scattered clumps of cactus and an occasional scuttling lizard they—the girl and the two men—were the only visible objects in a landscape which stretched levelly to a rim of jagged peaks on one side, a flat horizon line on the other.

They were, somewhat disjointedly, discussing their predicament.

"Surely, sooner or later, they'll miss us!"

"If we were only on the main highway—"

"As long as we have that water in the thermos jug—"

The little excursion which had begun so gaily that morning seemed likely to end in a tragedy that wouldn't bear thinking of.

Bill, Mary's young brother, moistened his lips with his tongue. Jim, the older of the two men and Bill's friend, watched Bill's sister. Mary tried to keep really sensible and alert as she gazed across this particular section of the Great Salt Desert.

The three were members of a party spending ten days in one of the mountain camps on the northern fringe of the desert. Today—both hours ago—somebody had suggested an all day trip to Lone Crater, one of those weird surroundings that dotted the vast waste spaces. At the final moment Bill had insisted he was driving the camp flivver rather than pile into the already crowded sedan and ride with a teasing glance at Mary, had urged Bill to accompany them.

The journey had been pleasant enough, and the picnic on the crater's sandy slopes a jolly affair. Jim had even managed to detach Mary from the others for an instant and whisper that he was just waiting for a decent opportunity to tell her something that was—well, awfully important to him!

They had come but a short distance on the way back, however, when, suddenly, blindingly, fearfully, a sand storm had engulfed them. For an hour and more the gritty, choking clouds enveloped them. Bill had been forced to give up all attempts at driving and when, finally, during a temporary lull, he had tried to start once more, he could not get the car to budge.

"Stand in the carburetor—" he pronounced. Yet cleaning the parts had done no good. The engine refused absolutely to function, either for Bill or Jim or the two of them together.

That was four—five hours ago. The other car had not returned. No other car had come along.

"I think," said Mary wistfully, "we'd all feel better if we had just one tiny taste of the water in the thermos jug!"

"That wouldn't do at all!" interposed Jim quickly.

"Got to save it, I suppose," said Bill, "in case—well, in case we have to wait longer than we expect."

There was nothing to do. No one felt like talking. Now and then Bill sprang up feverishly to prod ineffectually at various portions of the car's interior. Meanwhile the Indian sank imperceptibly nearer the horizon.

It will at least be cooler when night comes!" declared Mary once as cheerfully as possible. But she had no actual desire for night to find them still in the desert. Nor was she as cheerful as her tone implied. Secretly she was nourishing a bit of resentment at what she considered Jim's peremptory attitude about the water.

Once, when Jim had walked forward a few yards to make sure the road had not been covered by the sand storm, he looked back to see Bill reaching for the thermos jug. With a single leap he managed to get there first.

"Leave that jug alone, Bill! Absolutely, old man!"

Any Mary noticed that he did not leave the neighborhood of the jug again. She could not understand him. Was there something in his character she had better know about him before she permitted herself to yield to the tenderness she was beginning to feel towards him?

Then she saw that Bill, rather white and spent, was again running his tongue along his lip. "I'm giving him a drink, Jim!" she cried and held out her hand for the jug.

Jim thrust it behind him. "Not yet, Mary." he said quietly.

"How—how dare you?" Mary sprang forward. "How can you be so cruel? What right, anyhow—"

Jim's eyes were fixed beyond her. "Look!" he said tensely. "Then they come!"

Yes, still many miles away, an infinitesimal black speck was visible which had not been on the horizon before. Slowly, wonderfully, it grew larger and larger. Nearer and nearer became the car that bore, the rest of their party.

"We reached camp only to find you were not back. You see, during that dreadful sand storm somebody passed us and we thought it was you. And when we found that you had taken the empty thermos jug and we had the full one!"

Mary went rather white. Then she looked sorrowfully up at Jim. "And you knew all the time and that is why—"

"Yes, I knew," nodded Jim. "But I thought it better if you and Bill were kept in ignorance as long as possible. Sometimes, darling, while there's hope there's life!"

Mary went into his arms. It was the best apology she could think of on the spur of the moment.

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

Such things didn't happen in these days! It was like those silly old plays of long ago—like those sentimental novels she had found in a chest at Aunt Stel's. Deathbed promises—oh, they couldn't!

Cheeks hot. Heart pumping. The light in the room suddenly unbearable. She reached over, snapped it out. Sat for a long time in the dark, bowed over, hands pressed hard against her mouth to keep from bursting into sobs.

Later she got up and pulled off her clothes, moving as slowly as Ken had done at the last. She got into bed.

Grief, suddenly tearing at her throat, so that she fastened her face in the pillow, kept her the tenant in the next room near her. Wild anger shook through her like a hot wind. Incredible, this anger at Cecile. At the dying woman who was snatching away her happiness. Even at Ken, himself, that he should give her up.

Its very intensity bore it out. Follow ed a period of greasy calm when it seemed the heart within her had died. She had died. Ken had died. Dead things moving through a dead world. There would never be anything again but this horrible ache in her heart.

Periods when she lost herself in dreams as engrossing as reality, dreaming up through reeling blackness to face memory.

She lay flat, her face upturned to the back room, stupidly whispering Ken . . . Ken . . . "Tears rolled out of the outer corners of her eyes. Trickled behind her ears, wet her hair. So close she rolled her head restlessly.

Ken's Wedding Day.

Then the room was flooded with rainy daylight and the shimmers on the roofs outside came to view. The dreadful moment was here at last.

She whispered, "Today . . . Ken will be married . . ." Here dreadful to face it on this rainy light than it had been last night.

Sleep. Not sleeping on the roofs out side with the sound of heavy tears.

Would it always be like this? Ardeth asked herself piteously. Would this ache in her heart ever slow to a dull ache? When she was old—and at an April 31st, say, would all of this have receeded so it didn't matter? Then she was glad—but how could she live to grow old with this grief pressing on her heart?

If Ken's mother should die—suppose she were dead now—would need the duties exercise! If she were no longer here to be hurt as his refusal, Ken wouldn't have to—

Madly she tried to stifle the shame. To hope in her heart. Not that—of course, she didn't wish that—but, oh, surely something would happen—some thing always happened at the last moment to make things right, didn't it?

Maybe if she prayed

She kneeled down, rested her forehead on the edge of the bed and closed her eyes. No words came. No thoughts. Only the picture of Ken's face, so black and white last night.

What Could She Be?

(Tears began to steal from her closed eyes.

The telephone rang. Her heart leaped, swelled in her throat. The answer! God was answering the prayer in her heart!

Ah Ling's voice coming over the wire. "Are you coming down Miss Carroll?"

She had forgotten the time. She had forgotten the world.

A SPRAY OF HEATHER.

You bring me heather from the Scottish hills—
You bring me more—
My youth, and the long, happy dreaming days
I knew of yore.

You bring me pictures of the lofty hills;
Ben Lomond's side
Purple with heather in the autumn sun;
And far and wide,
The craggy moorlands clothed with gorse and ling;
A wild bird's call
Above the ruins of an ancient keep;
And, over all,
The sky whose burning blue is thinly veiled
With sudden rain.
As east winds blow a cloud across the sun,
In effort vain
To dim the brightness of the northern day;
A moment's space,
And on again across the ancient land
The gray clouds race.

And some dear things that I had counted lost,
This bit of purple heather has recalled
To eye and heart.

—Blanche A. Sawyer.

NO MORE CROWDING of the front seat of an automobile, if an amendment to the Highway Traffic Act passed at the recent session of the Ontario Legislature is obeyed. A penalty is provided if a person drives a motor vehicle with persons or parcels in the front seat so placed as to interfere with the proper management or control of the vehicle. A charge of neglectful driving may be laid against the driver. Just something else for motorists to consider whether. Another regulation has been passed providing that every commercial vehicle or trailer shall have securely attached to the rear thereof within six inches of the left side of the body in such a position as to reflect the light from the headlights of vehicles approaching from the rear, a RED REFLECTOR approved by the Department.

WHOOPEE is now in the dictionary, meaning "a gay frolic or lark." According to the new dictionary just published the origin of the word is dated back to 1622 when it was "whoope," but modern newspaper columnists unite in giving credit to Walter Winchell, Broadway columnist for originating the word in connection with wild doings at night clubs—although the Great White Way, "Making Whoopee."

BUILDING A MOTORWAY at an expense of two hundred million is another venture in finance which Yankee investors are willing to take.

The proposition is a paved highway, parallelling the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railway between New York City and Boston, and it is thought that the railway company is interested in the venture. The first half of the highway to New Haven would cost $200,000,000 and it is proposed to eventually extend the road to Boston. A bill has been introduced in the New York Legislature authorizing the project which will originate in New York, cross Connecticut and Rhode Island and terminate in Massachusetts. From two to three years would be required to complete the road to New Haven from New York City. The N.Y.N.H. and H. R'Y would have the motor bus franchise rights on the highway, and the railway stations along the route would be improved and used jointly by passengers on the railway and highway. The project is called an "express bus motor highway," which would suggest that those wishing to use it would be subject to payment of tolls for the privilege. It would be a private company operation with the prospect of being taken over eventually by the states concerned.

A.—The title "Miss" is always before her name, even though she is a school girl.

Q.—What is a popular and agreeable way to entertain?

A.—Probably the most popular way is to ask the guests to dine and then go to a play or a picture.

Q.—Should a woman wear her hat at luncheon?

A.—Yes.

TWO HUNDRED HELPERS ON THE FARM

There are over two hundred ways in which electric power lightens the labor of the farm, says Financial Post, and proceeds to enumerate them applying the energy to every activity of agriculture if would seem, from sheep shearing and drying of young lambs to pasteurization of milk, wash spraying and sawing of wood.

No wonder North Hastings member Hon. Robert Cooke, the Hydro Commissioner, has been anxious to see this agency of civilization given the farmer so that much of the drudgery of the farming occupation might be lightened. The good things that electric energy doubtless has in mind of the popular member he exceeds two hundred. That probably is but the beginning.

READS LIKE HISTORY

Mayor Wemp of Toronto in whom Belleville takes a great deal of interest as an old Hastings and Belleville boy retained only minor injury in the recent accident in Toronto after he had officiated at a ceremony of tearing down the chimneys of some old houses.

It reads like a story that used to be told in ancient history classes of a general being killed by a piece of brick thrown by an angry woman into the street. The hero of the air in the battle of Zeebrugge missed projectiles in the Great War but was hurt by a piece of stone material fifty pounds in weight hurled by a workman off a roof who did not know the mayor was still in the vicinity.

The friends are pleased that the accident did not result in serious injury.

SANCTUARY

Walter Turner, Belleville's bird lover who has shown such a passion for the feathered creation in the sanctuary in the Bleecker Woods, north of the city, that he has been and is giving of his own means to feed the visitors, should be supported by the people of these parts more and more. He has now the largest sanctuary outside of the famous Kingsville Jack Miner sanctuary and he is bringing Belleville a good name abroad. He is also getting forth the idea of thought of conservation of wild life and the coming generations if they have more consideration for the so-called dumb creatures which are not dumb at all but eloquent beyond words will owe much to him.

Mr. Turner rules the sanctuary like a king who is beloved. He is no tyrant over the feathered creatures which have shown him secrets of their nature which he would not surrender for the secrets of an empire. He rules by kindness and love in this woodland paradise of geese, ducks, bobolinks, meadowlarks, vireos, woodpeckers, bluejays, doves and bluebirds, song sparrows, warblers, wrens, orioles, highholders, sapsuckers, partridges. Only crows, murderers of young life in birdland and starlings are not wanted there in this bird home.

This is no fad of Mr. Turner's. It is a labor of love and a passion for fair treatment of the life which is brought so close to man and which has so many lessons for man as well as so many benefits to confer if man will but co-operate.

If all men in this section would co-operate as much with the birds as Mr. Turner, the woodlands and the trees would be a paradise of song. They would do endless good to the farms. Birds want to be happy. That is why they visit Mr. Turner. He has a place of safety for them. They reciprocate the kindness he has shown them by giving him their absolute confidence. Dog owners know what dogs will do for their masters and those they know. Birds are as trustful and confiding. That is the message of Jack Miner and Walter Turner to the people about bird life.

Mr. Turner is concerned about the decreasing number of birds. Establishment of sanctuaries like those of Kingsville and Belleville in all parts of the country he calls the secret of bird preservation.

He is going to keep sounding the clarion call of the birds until every means possible is taken to ensure their protection and preservation.

NATIONAL SONGS

A few days ago the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Alexander Muir was celebrated. He it was who wrote the words of "The Maple Leaf." Muir has been dead twenty-four years.

The song which he created was years ago played and sung everywhere but in Canada it has fallen from its high pinnacle as the national song, 'O Canada" superseding it.

Schoolboys of a generation or two ago felt the thrill of the words "in days of yore from Britain's shore, Wolfe the dauntless hero came."

Whether his song will survive through the next two generations is for the future to decide. Whether it does or not he helped to inspire Canadians who have given good service to their native land.

It is probable that Canada will give birth to a yet greater song than any that has been written. This will come like the things of the spirit whence and when least expected. Suddenly for all times there is crystallized the national consciousness and aspiration in song. Till that day dawns Canada will sing "The Maple Leaf" and "O Canada."

Press Comment on Amalgamation

Among the references to the amalgamation of the two dailies in Belleville into The Ontario Intelligencer which are much appreciated are the comments of the press in various parts of the province. Among these are the following:

THE ONTARIO INTELLIGENCER

On Tuesday, April 1st Belleville's new merged newspaper, The Ontario Intelligencer made its appearance, the heir to The Intelligencer and The Ontario which for over sixty years have served Belleville and district.

Both daily papers which go to make up the new paper have a long and historic past. The Ontario having been for many years owned by the late T. S. Carman and The Intelligencer by the family of the late Sir Mackenzie Bowell.

In the merger there has been accomplished what has been taking place for some years in most of the two newspaper cities of Ontario. In every instance this has been felt to be in the interest of the public, the readers, the advertiser and the community alike.—Brighton Ensign.

PAPER AMALGAMATION

Starting April 1st the Belleville Intelligencer and the Belleville Ontario have been amalgamated and the new paper is being issued under the name of The Ontario Intelligencer. Belleville was the last of the small cities in Ontario to have two daily papers. In fact, Toronto, Hamilton, London and Ottawa are the only cities to have two daily papers now. The cost of issuing a daily paper has increased so enormously since the war that the smaller cities could not support more than one good paper. In the towns and villages which formerly had two and some times three weekly newspapers, in most cases there is only one now. The Ontario Intelligencer should be able to serve the city and community much more efficiently than the two papers did formerly.—Marmora Herald.

ANOTHER PAPER MERGER

While the actual business deal went through quite a while ago the two newspapers in Belleville did not officially merge until this week and now the former "Ontario" and "Intelligencer" appears under the name of "The Ontario Intelligencer." The first issued appeared on Tuesday of this week, a sixteen page number, in which an explanation of the change is made and some historical matter given in connection with the publishing business in that city. Belleville had a paper some 90 years ago, but the Intelligencer did not begin until 1834 and was published first as a weekly and then as a daily until now. The Ontario had its beginning in 1861 and continued until now when it becomes merged with the Intelligencer, another combination due to economic pressure and desire to give better service to the public. That desire is set forth in the foreword to its readers in which it is pointed out that Belleville's papers are merely following in the footsteps of many others in Ontario and that in no other way can a small city be served with a really adequate daily paper. The announcement further says that it is felt that the paper we will now be in a position to give an up-to-date service in every respect, both local and foreign news, the latter being taken care of by an automatic telegraph service from the Canadian Press providing thousands more words than either paper published before. And so another town joins the ranks of the one paper towns with independent papers. In the course of about a decade the same thing happened in some 15 other towns and cities in Ontario, not to mention the weekly papers that have either merged or suspended publication. It has meant the virtual disappearance, outside of one or two places, of the political newspaper and has meant a gain for the readers in impartial presentation of news and current events.—Lindsay Post, Friday, April 4th.

LETTERS to the Editor

Editor Ontario Intelligencer.

Dear Sir,—

May I congratulate the City of Belleville upon passing from ancient history to modern methods in the newspaper field? More power to The Ontario Intelligencer.

I can recall the terrific battles in front of the days of old, and one day when I was in The Intelligencer office to get the papers for a lad who was ill with a scarlet fever, there was a terrific row back stage where the printing of the day's news was under way. Words, torrents of words! And all in highpitched anger! It seems one of the paper was very late, and, in addition, The Ontario had something in it which was like a red flag to The Intelligencer bull. We newsboys stood in line, scared to complain, after the delay. Suddenly out of the back and came the front office bumped a wild looking man who seemed anxious to take it out on someone. He held in his hands an aluminum ruler with one bulb water. He went up and down the line of scared lads spraying us with savage glee and saying, "Ah ha! So you've been down and got your Ontario papers late, eh? Well I'll have to disinfect you!" Who this was I do not know. The establishment now wipes these things out or sweeps them into the past. The loss of local colour may be great, but the gain in world values will be greater and what is invaluable have been long ago.

From a personal angle, and even in that there is the national aspect of it, as we work. I am glad to see the owner of The Ontario at the head of the new paper, for the old Ontario appreciated my poetical ideals and could see very practical service in them. Not only for the support of the past, but for the recent editorial to appear so soon after the amalgamation, drawing attention to my work for Canada, I thank you. It is very kind and broad of you to do this thing. I have had some very fine letters of appreciation come out of Belleville following my radio address from Toronto. They have, more or less, taken me by surprise. Would that they had spoken sooner!

It was very pleasing to me to see on the same page as that poetical concerning Abbey-Dawn, a splendid one on the little book brought out by Jan. Edmonds Jones on our wild flowers, Columbine, so lovely to see growing with quickly when picked and is one of the flowers that should not be picked. Vast bunches are picked, and the plants lost forever, every Spring and Summer. Anyone in Belleville who wants to carefully transplant rare and favorite wild flower plants to a safe place, may, upon request, find sanctuary in Abbey Dawn.

Yours sincerely,
WALLACE HAVELOCK ROBB.

YOUNG CYCLIST IS SOUGHT BY TORONTO POLICE

TORONTO, April 7.—Intensive search is being made by police of Toronto and other towns along the highway to North Bay, for 14-year-old Arthur Hill, who has not been seen since he left home at 28 Walder Avenue early Saturday morning.

He set out on his red bicycle—its handlebar basket filled with magazines which he planned ostensibly to sell from door to door. It is feared, however, that he may have started on his bicycle, after selling the magazines for his aunt's home at Alumic Harbor, on the Magnetawan River.

This is more than 150 miles from Toronto, north of Parry Sound, on Georgian Bay, but it is thought the boy may have planned to do the trip by easy stages. His stepfather, J. E. Clark, is afraid Arthur may have met with an accident on the road or fallen into a ditch.

Arthur had no money when he left home, though he may have gathered some together from the sale of magazines. He was dressed in a brown suit and an aviation cap.

Foster, followed by prayer by Mrs. D. Thompson. Another hymn 228 "Take the name of Jesus with you".

Miss Lily Ketchison then took the Devotional Leaflet, dealing with the persecution of the early Christians, and the present day need of the spread of the Gospel. A song "The Old Rugged Cross", was then given by several of the ladies.

Mrs. Clayton Hagerman then gave a part of the Fourth Chapter from the study book "Jerusalem to Jerusalem" which was very interesting and instructive.

Miss Lily Ketchison then favored with a beautiful instrumental selection which was much enjoyed by all.

Some discussion took place of a bazaar to be held in the near future as a means of raising funds for the Society Closing hymn 62 followed by prayer by President. Members present, thirteen. Collection ninety cents, Two membership fees paid in.

'STAR OF EAST' CLIPPER SOLD FOR SIXTEEN THOUSAND POUNDS

Top Price Paid for St. John Built Ship, Was Wrecked

HALIFAX, N.S., April 7.—Just what was the highest price ever paid for a Colonial ship, often the subject of controversy, has apparently been settled and to the beautiful Saint John built clipper Star of the East, goes the honor. This magnificent ship, launched in the early part of the year 1853, was sold immediately on the completion of her maiden voyage to Liverpool, records show, by James Beazley, of Liverpool, and was promptly secured by Messrs. Millers and Thompson for their Golden Line of Australian packets, bringing £16,500.

Built by the celebrated firm of William and R. Wright who also constructed the famous clippers Constance and Miles Barton and other vessels well known in the Australian trade, the Star of the East made her first voyage across the Atlantic against strong northeast winds, beating by several days two crack packet ships from Boston.

Her arrival at Liverpool created unusual interest in nautical circles. The Star of the East became the centre of attraction, and the general conclusion was that such a ship of equal had never been seen before on the Mersey.

The symmetry of her lines made her true size doubtful. Only on close inspection was it apparent that she was a ship of 1,219 tons instead of 700 some took her for a yacht from the exquisite proportions of her hull and spars. Surprise was manifested by many when they were informed that she was a merchantman in charge of deals on board.

When fitted and ready for the Australian trade the Star of the East cost her owners £22,681. Fourteen staterooms were provided for the accommodation of passengers. Perhaps her most notable passage was a round voyage Liverpool, Melbourne, Sydney, Shanghai and Liverpool in 9 months and 29 days, taking 104 days to return from Shanghai.

During her career the ship made seven voyages in the Australian trade profit of £19851. Her first two voyages netted £16,238. Seven years after launching the Star of the East, commanded by Captain W. Chrystian was wrecked at Stormy Bay, South Africa, close to the Miles Barton. She was insured for £10,000.

Like the Star of the East, the Miles Barton, 963 tons register, was built by W. and R. Wright, and lasted seven years. Called after Miles Barton, cotton broker, in whose office Joshua Beazley served as an apprentice, the vessel carried passengers in the Australian trade. Her net profits in seven voyages was £21,214. Costing her owners £13,329, and insured for £7,000 the vessel was wrecked on February 6th, 1861. Her commander was Captain William Kelly.

Named after Constance Haigh, whose father Thomas Haigh, was a part owner, the Constance, 963 tons register, cost £11,925, and in 9 voyages netted £17,678. She was sold in 1865 for £4,300.

Most beautiful of these Saint John-built clippers was the Star of the East. Although extremely sharp fore and aft the vessel had a great beam which made a most comfortable ship in a sea-way. Her principle dimensions were: Length of keel, 208 feet; over all, 227 feet; beam, 40 feet; 19 inches; depth of hold, 22 feet; register 1,219 tons; depth of keel and keison, through and through, 8 feet 6 inches 17 inches sided.

A full length female figure-head ornamented her bow. Her stern was elliptical. The vessel was copper fast eened throughout. Her deck arrangements were compact and the houses included galleys, hospital two forecastles for the seamen and a long poop house aft with passages on either side, containing two saloons.

The Star of the East was richly fitted throughout and it was written of her in Liverpool, "Go where she will, she must command the attention of all beholders."

SPANS CONTINENT IN TOW GLIDER

New York, April 7.—Frank Hawks would seem to have a weakness for flying across the continent; also a habit of getting there when he said he'd do it from one coast to the other by air.

It was the first aerial glider flight the last crossing of America by glider, and Hawks' verdict when he emerged out of the Texaco Eagle in which he flew was "Never again—at least for sport or pleasure."

ANOTHER ROBBER IN CUTTEN TRAP

Famous Chicago Financier Runs Down Eighth of Gang

Chicago, April 7. — "No. 8," said Arthur W. Cutten, noted stock and grain operator, as he read a telegram from Lieut. Frank Cahillen of the detective bureau, dated Cleveland, notifying him of the arrest of a man who had been identified as Simon Rosenberg, alleged leader of the gang of nine bandits that raided the Cutten home near Downey's Grove, on March 27, 1922.

For eight years Mr. Cutten has employed the power of money to run down this gang He employed scores of detectives, who combed the country. One by one the bandits fell into his traps One by one seven have been sent to the penitentiary to serve long sentences. Rosenberg is the eighth man caught Only one other wanted by Cutten is now at large, Kaspah Rosenber, a brother of the leader.

"I will follow that fellow and get him if it costs $50,000," said Cutten.

The robbers, when they invaded the Cutten home, took $20,000 worth of jewelry $500 in cash and 6 cases of whiskey from Mr. and Mrs. Cutten and his brother, Harry.

"The money and jewelry were nothing," Cutten said. "What made me determined to get them if it took a lifetime was the fact that they tied up Mrs Cutten, tied up my brother and tied up the servants, and then locked me in the basement vault to be smothered to death.

"When I get No 9 I'll be through with the job."

OLD CALENDAR MORE PRACTICAL

Calendar Divided Months in Periods of three weeks and 10 Days Each

(Canadian Press)

La Paz, Bolivia, April 7.—Professor Arthur Posnansky, celebrated German archaeologist who specializes in ushering data on forgotten sciences of ancient civilizations here, has found among the relics of the Tiahuanacan a more serious race that flourished thousands of years ago a calendar far more practical than the one now generally in use.

The learned priests of this ancient race, according to Professor Posnansky, based their calendar on a year of twelve months like the Gregorian calendar, but divided the months into three weeks of ten days each. The odd days were added to the final holidays or were set aside for worship.

The astronomical marvels of the Gregorian calendar were shown in pamphlets prepared for distribution by a special Bolivian committee attending the Pan American Congress, said Professor Posnansky. "Discuss on followed on three kinds of calendars, our own, of twelve months; a calendar of twelve months with equal trimesters, and a calendar of thirteen months with twenty-eight with four weeks. But this system of having three weeks of ten days each would, in my estimation, excel any of these discussed."

Professor Posnansky said that by the calendar the ancient Tiahuanacan calendar much inconvenience could be avoided.

Tiahuanaca is the name given to a collection of very ancient ruins in Western Bolivia, 12 miles from the shallow end of Lake Titicaca and not far from Peruvian frontier. The ruins include remains of several large buildings, monolithic doorways, and huge statues. Many of the blocks, which are enormous, are elaborately sculptured and fitted together with great skill.

PRODUCTION OF GLACIAL ACETIC ACID IN CANADA

One Plant Turns out More Than all Germany in 1928

(Canadian Press)

Montreal, April 7.—Canada produces by far the largest amount of glacial acetic acid in the world and the one plant of the Shawinigan Chemicals, Limited, this year turned out more than all Germany in 1928 and all the United States in 1929, according to H. S. Reid, B.A., M.Sc., vice-president in charge of manufacturing of the Shawinigan Company, who spoke at the monthly meeting of the Montreal section of the Society of Chemical Industry.

Mr. Reid stated that the company now supplies the bulk of the acetic acid used in Canada, 25 per cent. of that used in the United States as well as much in New Zealand, Australia, Mexico and Cuba. It also exports large quantities of cerdale and acetate of lime to these countries, as well as furnishing most of the wants of the Dominion.

The plant could easily supply all the needs of the entire British Empire, but these three chemicals if it were called upon to work at full capacity during the year, the speaker explained. The company employs 1,000 men and the annual payroll totals about a million and a quarter dollars; it pays about $800 000 a year to the railways for transporting raw materials ship the finished products, export of the company for last year totalled $6,000,000, a substantial figure in total Dominion exports.

About $250,000 a year is spent in laboratory research work divided evenly between plant research and pure research.

Mr. Reid recalled the early days when he came to the company, then the Canadian Electric Products Company, in 1913. At first the work was almost entirely experimental and they were feeling their way. The World War made it imperative that production be pushed be immediate and extensive, which was done and filled a great need.

After the war there was no more demand for the products but the company continued for a time with its extensive plant research. Just as a further operating period was commenced the depression of 1921 caused an eight month shut-down but the company was able to resume afterwards. Expansion continued slowly until 1926 when sudden rapid advances commenced which have continued ever since, particularly in the past two years. In January, 1929, the company became the Shawinigan Chemicals, Limited.

WOMEN COPS AID IN SOCIAL WORK

Those Versed in Social Welfare Would Materially Help

MONTREAL, April 7.—Police women, particularly those versed in social welfare work, should form an integral part of any police department, and the value of police women in preventing delinquency is widely recognized in the United States. J. H. T. Park, executive director of Financial Federation and of the Montreal Council of Social Agencies, declared when commenting upon the assertion of Director H. Lanservin of the Montreal Police Department, to the effect that police women are unnecessary on the staff of the Montreal police force.

"The policewomen movement in the United states is growing rapidly," Mr. Park said. "Grover Whalen, commissioner of the New York Police Department, according to newspaper reports, has recently appointed a prominent social worker as head of the 'Policewomen's Division' of his department."

"It is significant that the New York policewomen work in close touch with the social agencies of that city," Mr. Park said, laying strong emphasis upon the value of the social worker and social studies in the prevention of delinquency.

NEW METHODS NOW ADOPTED

Modern Way of Handling Milk Has Brought Revenue to Farmers

(Canadian Press)

Quebec, April 7.—Years of effort to win farmers to modern methods in connection with butter, milk and cream on this part of Quebec health inspectors have begun to show results, E. E. Allard, director of the milk inspection branch of the local health department stated recently.

Three years ago the milk inspectors forwarded to milk shippers the plans of a scientific dairy, after which were centralized an icehouse and concrete vats to cool milk in summer and keep it from freezing in winter. A year ago, two farmers adopted the plan and had new vats installed, then many other farmers have installed similar vats, Dr. Marcien, municipal health head, stated: "The significance of this development can be fully appreciated, it means the turning point in the difficult task of winning the farmers to our views on the milk question."

NEW TERMINAL AT MONTREAL IS STARTED

Six New Subways Will be Constructed in Parts of Quebec Metropolis

MONTREAL Que., April 7.—Work has begun on the section of the new Canadian National Railways Montreal Terminal project which lies in the southwest of the city between Turcot and Point St. Charles. A force of men are at work at Charlevoix street, south of the Lachine Canal, preparing for the construction of the first of six new subways in that part of the city. In addition to these new subways at St. Remi, De Courcelles, Notre Dame, St. Rémi, De Courcelles, Notre Dame, St. Ambroise (for pedestrians only), Charlevoix and Hibernia and Atwater streets will remains and those at D'Argenson and Wellington streets will be rebuilt.

The type of subway to be erected is similar to that one now in use at Atwater avenue, the tracks being partly elevated and the street partly depressed. This elevation will be of the embankment type, which affords greater facility for the construction and making tresses of side tracks to serve industrial plants, an important factor to be considered in that highly industrialized district.

Concurrently with the construction of the subway between Turcot and Pt. St. Charles, at an estimated cost of approximately $2,500,000 work will be started on the main portion of the scheme, that is the Central Station line and the new line linking it with Victoria Bridge. The tracks from the Central Station to Victoria Bridge will cross over streets and where there are existing buildings on the sides of the tracks, or new ones constructed, they will screen to that extent the trackage except on street crossings.

The excavation work is to be started on the site of the Central Station about May 1. This will require the removal of about 1,100,000 cubic yards of earth and rock, which will be used for the filling and levelling of new sites and other yards and for the grading of several miles of new lines to be constructed in connection with the new terminal.

Other works, to be started as soon as possible, include the construction of a branch line in the eastern part of the city, running from Hochelaga St. to Longue Pointe to Exeter Junction, a distance of approximately six and a half miles, which will reduce by more than 30 miles the existing distance by C.N.R. between Longue Pointe and Turcot. At the present time a freight car going from Longue Pointe to Turcot Yards via C.N.R., a distance of 11 miles as the crow flies, has to be routed via Montreal and Belt Junction, a distance of 108.4 miles unless routed over the Harbour Commissioners tracks.

Another branch line to be constructed will extend from a point west of Pointe Claire to a point north of Valois Lake, over this line will be routed the trains coming from the western part of the island which will enter the Central Station.

All these works, states Mr. C. B. Brown, chief engineer of the Canadian National Railways in charge of Terminals, will proceed steadily and the whole scheme will be pursued with a view to causing the least interference and delays to traffic.

HOSPITALITY OF CANADA TO BE SHOWN SHRINERS

Canadian National Railways Will Wage Extensive Publicity Campaign

TORONTO, Ont., April 7.—Canadian hospitality, Canadian scenery and Canadian hospitality will be the three selling points in a big campaign to be waged by the Canadian National Railways next June when the shrine convention arrives with its scores of thousands of visitors. No such single opportunity ever offered before, whereby the much talked of annual returns from tourist traffic can be swelled, stated H. C. Bourlier, general passenger agent and councillor of the Toronto Board of Trade, as today he outlined the National system's plan. "It has become universally recognized that traffic is a majority in any national trade balance. The Canadian National Railways will have 10,000 guests, mostly from United States, housed in palatial cars at its own coach yards, known as triple park in honor of the convention in June. We will do our utmost to put across our big selling points there."

Some 300 or more diners, will be located in Temple Park to feed the visiting Shriners. The food supplied them by the C.N.R. dining car department will be distinctively Canadian. Thus Ontario will be identified with the Maritime Provinces from which it comes. The menu will likely be beautiful Nova Scotia. The gold-eye will have epicurean tie with Lake Winnipeg. The Manitoba baked apple will be labelled from Ontario A sweet tooth will specify Canadian Quebec maple syrup. Tempting roast meat may carry the distinctive of originating in the Prairie provinces, while the Pacific Coast will contribute Halibut. If the way to a visitor's heart is via his stomach, he will find a glow of satisfaction in recalling Canada.

At Temple Park a large information staff is to be installed. It will aid the visitors on Canadian tours and be particular interest of each section of the country and plan trips if requested. In the form of a permanent exhibit the Temple Park authorities are issuing a booklet descriptive of Central Canada and its attractions. If the weather should prove inclement, films of the out-door sport in Canada will be shown in the spacious shrine headquarters at Temple Park. "If we can get our guests in the frame of mind to repeat their visit, our task will have been accomplished," concluded Mr. Boulier.

No More Piles

Pile sufferers can only get quick, safe and lasting relief by removing the cause—bad blood circulation in the lower bowel. Cutting and salves can't do this—an internal remedy must be used. Dr. Leonhardt's Hem-Roid, a harmless tablet, succeeds because it relieves this condition and strengthens the affected parts. Hem-Roid has a wonderful record for quick, safe and lasting relief to Pile sufferers. It will do the same for you or money back. J. S. McKeown and druggists anywhere sell Hem-Roid with this guarantee.

CHILD IS KILLED BY AUTO OF M.P.

OTTAWA, April 7.—An automobile driven by Leslie C. Bell, Conservative member of parliament for Saint Antoine in the federal legislature, struck and fatally injured three-year-old Florence Roy, near her home on Main street, West Hull, Saturday night. The little girl died as she was being admitted to a Hawkesbury hospital, where she had been taken for medical aid.

Dr. H. H. Kirby, coroner, was told that Florence had been riding on the back of a wagon which was travelling east on Main street. Mr. Bell was driving west towards Ottawa from his home in Westmount.

Without giving warning the child jumped from the back of the wagon and ran in the path of the oncoming automobile. Mr. Bell jammed the brakes but although he was travelling at a moderate speed he could not avoid striking the child.

CRIPPLES BECOME USEFUL CITIZENS

Tuberculosis and Infantile Paralysis Most Prevalent Cause of Cripples

(Canadian Press)

Montreal, April 7.—The under-privileged, hand capped cripple of today is the useful citizen of tomorrow, said Dr. Breitman at the conclusion of an address which he gave to the Baron de Hirsch Book Club a short time ago.

Investigations showed, he said, that the causes of crippled children were infantile paralysis congenital deformities and accidents. Infantile paralysis was the most prevalent. Dr. Breitman stressed the usefulness of the serum applied in the early stages of the disease owing to the fact that the deformities which it caused were progressive in nature. Treatment in hospital was the best for cases of this kind.

Referring to congenial deformities, Dr. Breitman said that the medical profession could now give every assurance of a complete cure. It was believed that 50 per cent of crippled children can be restored to normal. He stated that there were approximately 7,-500 cripple children in Canada and that 500 were to be found this year. He paid a tribute to the work done in the interests of the crippled child by the service clubs and referred to the recent foundation of the Province of Quebec Society for Crippled Children.

The crippled child's had their prospects in industry now than those of long ago, for it was found possible to employ disabled persons in modern factories where they could do work that was equal if not superior to that which was done by people with normal limbs.

Miller's Worm Powders not only make the infantile system uninhabitable to worms, but by their action on the stomach, liver and bowels they correct the disorders so lack of which worms are the internal disorders that the worms create. Children thrive upon them and no matter what condition their worm-infested stomachs may be in, they will show improvement as soon as the treatment begins.

Tenders on Concrete, Steel, Bridge Considered

BRIDGE TENDERS ARE REFERRED TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO REPORT

Concrete Bridge Tenders Nearly All Lower Than Steel Tenders —Figures Not Announced— Lower Front Street Merchants Raise Protest—The Council's Answer—Parking Changes Mooted.

After a special session of the city council lasting nearly four hours in which the proposed new bridge over the Moira River on Bridge Street and the proposed new filtration plant were fully discussed, the body adjourned without awarding the contract for the construction of the bridge but passing a recommendation accepting the plans and specifications as drawn by Messrs. Gore, Nasmith and Storrie for the filtration plant. The council will meet again on Thursday night and the special committee composed of Alderman McMillan, Alderman Woodley, Alderman Walker, City Engineer Charles A. Mott, and Consulting Engineer A. B. Crealock will report their findings of the several tenders put in and lay on the table a recommendation as to what tender in their opinion should be accepted.

There were sixteen tenders put in on the bridge and although the press was not given the figures of the different tenders it is believed there was a large spread between the high and low. Twelve also put in figures for a steel bridge and in nearly every instance the amount was higher than for concrete.

Before the tenders were opened a delegation of merchants representing the lower part of Front Street waited on the council's committee requesting that the tourist traffic be not interfered with by early construction as it would be a detriment to business, they claimed. It is believed the council told the delegation, the expense of building the bridge in the front months would be considerably higher and the bridge would probably not be as good a bridge. Mr. A. B. Creelock who has been retained as consulting engineer was not in favor of building the bridge in the front months or in the winter as proposed as the cost would be much higher as more material would have to be used.

Commemorating that glorious and enviable record that Canadians piled up for themselves at the historic battle of Vimy Ridge thirteen years ago, a banquet will be held in Picton tonight which will be attended by men who fought in that historic engagement from Picton, Belleville and the surrounding district.

Thirteen ago to-night Canadian soldiers were strung out along the top of Vimy Ridge, captors of one of the strongest fortifications ever constructed by man.

Four divisional, roughly fifteen thousand men, drove the Germans back and in the evening consolidated their position on the log of the ridge From this ridge the Canucks were never displaced although on the 15th of the month the enemy staged a heavy counter attack. Tonight Vimy will bedescribed by eminent speakers.

War Hero Thanks Mayor Reid And City For Assistance

Gratitude is said to be rather a scarce article these days, but that it is still to be found is proved by a letter received by Mayor Reid this morning from a war veteran of Capreol, Ontario, who last week visited Belleville in search of employment.

The man in question had with him his wife and five children. He visited the new Trenton airport in the hope of obtaining employment but night came and no job was in sight. He had no funds and appealed to the War Veterans for help. Rooms for the night were secured at the Queens' Hotel, and next morning a collection was taken up at the City Hall and enough money donated to buy the hungry party meals. Mayor Reid purchased a railway ticket to take them back home and the family departed well-fed and happy. This morning the Mayor received a letter from the man expressing very sincere gratitude for the help given to him.

OVER $4000 PROFITS SHOWN BY MUNICIPAL COLLECTION OF TOLLS

Alderman French and German Reid Collector Show Increased Revenue from Market—Alderman and Collector Congratulated by Council.

Chairman of Market and City Property, Gilbert H. French of the City Council gave an account of his stewardship of the market tolls last night at the meeting of the city fathers and the report handed in was most gratifying. A year ago when the lease for the market was up for consideration by council, instead of letting the market to one individual decided to run it as a civic enterprise and the result has been that a considerable revenue has been obtained. Alderman French has been in close touch with the situation through the year and a profit of $4,136.38-has resulted. The expenditures were $1,413.43 and the total receipts $5,610.33. Market tolls were $1629.13, weighing fees $2,540.75, inside reservations $649.50, outside $828.00.

The market clerk German Reid was hired by the week and in his statement of salary he was allowed $20 which will be seen on two occasions he drew $148.20. This was caused by there being three pays in each of the two months. The repairs and supplies for the market for the year amounted to the small sum of $129.03. In the report each month's operation is given separately and the steppers will at a glance can tell exactly where the money was received. The report concluded the alderman on the splendid report and from now on the market will be a source of revenue to the city and maintain the standard for which it is noted in all Ontario. The report as given by Ald. French follows:

P. R. SCHEME FOR LARGEST CITIES

Reported From Ottawa That Proportional Representation Will Be Tried

OTTAWA, April 9—Toronto and other cities of more than 100,000 population will be given the privilege of Parliament by a plan of proportional representation at the next session of the Dominion general election, according to a report now in circulation in Government circles here. It is held to be quite within the realm of possibility that the Government will introdcss at the present session of Parliament a bill providing for the partial inauguration of the P. R. system.

The references made by Premier King on Thursday last to proportional representation are cited as giving more solid foundation to reports which have gained wide credence. With respect to the acceptance of the principle of proportional representation Mr. King said "That remains to be brought about and I hope we have not long."

When J. A. Macdonald (Conservative, Richmond) was asked: "Then will be a new plank?"

Premier King replied: "It will not be a new plank, but it will be one for which, I venture to say, my honorable friends will not give his support."

Other cities besides Toronto affected, if the Hanenaken were applied on the 100,000 population basis, would be Hamilton and Ottawa in Ontario and Montreal, Westmount, Winnipeg, Vancouver and Quebec.

An observer has noted that there are twelve gasoline stations between Belleville and Trenton which means that there is an average of one station for every mile on the route. JURY SUGGESTS STEINBURG KNEW

Startling Testimony Heard At Inquest Into Goldberg Death

TORONTO, April 9— "We find that Sam Goldberg came to his death on the evening of March 5, 1930, at 153 Dundas Street West, Toronto, as the result of being shot through the head by a bullet from a revolver which was later found and identified as having been owned by Abram Steinberg and from the evidence we are unanimously of the opinion that the said Abram Steinberg had knowledge of the crime."

This was the verdict brought in last night by the jury, after an afternoon and evening session of the inquiry before Chief Coroner M. M. Crawford, which was, in itself, the first stage in the unravelling of the mysterious fire and murder which took place in the Goldberg Monument Works five weeks ago. Yesterday at 10 o'clock the preliminary hearings of the murder trial opened in the City Hall, when Abram Steinberg will stand trial for his life for the murder of his business partner and brother-in-law, Sam Goldberg.

The evidence unfolded at the six-hour inquiry yesterday was of a very sensitive character, and involved the bringing of witnesses from Chesley, Ontario, where the Steinberg family some years ago. One of these witnesses, Kennedy Wilson, positively identified the revolver found by Detective Sergeant Levitt in the Dundas Street yard as the one that Mrs. and Philip Steinberg, Abram's son, had used on a motor trip at Chesley last year some years ago. Dr. Deroma, the medico-legal adviser of the Quebec Provincial Government, to whom were shown both the revolver and the slug found in the embers of the ash heap behind the monument plant, declared, after orthiglophy" —(sic)—ek, NWL after thorough investigation, that it was positive that the bullet was fired from that revolver.

PLAN TO ACCEPT MONEY AT PAR

WASHINGTON, April 9 — A plan will be started by the Federal Reserve System soon providing for the interchange of Canadian and United States exchange, which eventually may lead to an arbitrary parity.

The Federal Reserve facilities will be used for collection and transfer of United States and Canadian funds under an arrangement worked out by the board. Under the plan Canadian currency routed to the country would flow through the member banks into which it would travel and received with bit discount and the Federal Reserve System thus furnishing a big advantage to business houses and individuals engaged in commercial dealings with Canada. The plan would contemplate the handling of drafts against Canadian business houses on the same basis.

URUGUAY FORGES TO THE FRONT

MONTEVIDEO, — By bringing the Chaco negotiations through a maze of almost insurmountable difficulties and finally gathering even greater powers in rallying to participate in last week's historic session of the Pan-American communications with the United States. Her diplomatic intercourse with the leading world powers and especially with the neighboring republics of South and Central America has been restricted to a point where it has been almost completely suspended.

Uruguayan statesmen, ever alert to push Uruguay to the fore despite its being the smallest of the South American republic, have taken advantage of this situation. They assumed the leading position in the Chaco negotiations as soon as Argentina declined to continue them.

The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Rufinot Dominguez, has worked under many discouraging difficulties to bring Bolivia and Paraguay to an agreement regarding the boundaries of Fors Boqueron and Varagudia. Both he and Senor Cansinos Cassinge are receiving unanimous praise throughout the continent on the successful outcome of their efforts. Senor Domines was particularly insistent that the date for the renewal of diplomatic relations between Bolivia and Paraguay should not be changed.

This is generally given the credit for the fact that the present unsatisfactory situation will not continue beyond May 1.

In short, the settlement of th eChaco dispute has added materially to the prestige of Uruguay among the Latin American republics just at the moment when Argentina, which by right of size, wealth and population should exercise leadership on the Continent, seems determined to leave that leadership to others.

ment who lost no time in arriving on the scene.

Beekeeper in Danger

Miss Fraser's position is a dangerous predicament for a short time as the navy exit from the office is through the door which leads into the small room where the fire was blazing. Fortunately Mr. Harold Barrage arrived just as the alarm was turned in and by breaking a window succeeded in rescuing Miss Fitzgerald before any harm could come to her.

A considerable amount of stock which was stored in the warehouse was lost and the roof completely destroyed. Orwell is due to Fire Department in saving the rest of the building as the roof was packed with shavings and highly inflammable. The damage is completely covered by the $4,000 policy held with the H. F. Ketchison Co. Business is practically at a standstill as rents were recovered today by the company.

The building will be repaired at once and a new roof will be built. Mr. R. F. White, contractor, is in charge of the work.

Chimney Blaze

A small chimney fire at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Garfield W. Carson, Brown street, gave the Fire Department their second run of the day. No damage was done and the blaze was extinguished without difficulty.

HAMILTON TRIO GUILTY OF THEFT

Admit Having Stolen Fish From Shanty Along the Bay

TRENTON, Ont, April 9.— (Special by Staff Reporter).—Oscar and Alfred Crockwright, along with Arthur Starrs, came all the way from Hamilton, last week-end to fish in the waters of the Bay of Quinte, but it certainly proved to be expensive fishing for them. They failed to catch any of the elusive denizens of the Bay, but they did break into Clayton Parr's fish house along the Bay Shore just east of Trenton, and took over sixty pounds of pike away with them. Yesterday afternoon before Magistrate O'Rourke, they were charged with theft of the fish, and, along with Earl Crockwright of Trenton, were tried before Magistrate O'Rourke, and although allowed to go on suspended sentence of one year, had to pay the costs, which amounted to twenty-one dollars in each case.

Mr. Parr had his suspicions as to whom the culprits were, and on informing the Provincial Police, who investigated, the men were found, and after questioning admitted the theft. They were charged with breaking and entering as well as theft. When asked to plead before the Magistrate, the three Hamilton men declared they were not guilty, while Earl Crockwright, also of Trenton, admitted the charge. When it was explained to them that even though they had not done the actual breaking and entering, they were guilty if they were in the party, all three changed their plea to "guilty" and paid their fines. In addition to the fines, Mr. Parr was recompensed to the extent of ten dollars for his fish and for a lock on the door which was broken.

Mr. J. C. Donnan, Crown Attorney conducted the prosecution, and the accused were represented by Provincial Constables Hammer and Sykes ter assisted by Chief Bain of Trenton had charge of the investigation.

RADIO FANS CORNER

I wasn't at all pleased with the reception last night, were you, fans? It lacked volume for one thing and I didn't notice any great overload distortion. Can't help everything we want in this world I know but one hopes a while we would like to see perfect reception.

Bebe Daniels and Richard Dix held the spotlight last night, didn't they? Mighty good too, can't say any differently and make those who listened in believe it. In fact it was a fine program like the Keith Orpheum put on for its invisible audience.

Can't say the programs for Wednesday night hold out any thrilling promises but just glancing over them I notice that coming from station WOR we have the Lucerne-in-Quebec program. Canada has sent another of its artists to WOR to partake in the presentation and it begins at 7.30. Miss Ellen Ballon is the artist and she was recently the sole pianist at the official Canadian dinner for the Prince of Wales. Ramsay MacDonald, in Montreal. She has appeared as the soloist of the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall and at the Metropolitan Opera House.

Think'ng it over after looking it over we're not going to have such a dumb time tonight after all. Here we have WJZ with a nice program and over WABC at nine o'clock. Sure he's good.

Retting and Pain duo will feature the Yeast Foamers' program today when they play "Dixie" from an old favourite over WJZ and chain at 8 o'clock.

Frank Black's arrangement of Percy Wenrich's new song, "Make My Bed Down in Dixieland" will be sung over the air for the first time by the Silvertones, a male quartet broadcasting over WFAF during the Palmolive hour tonight at 9:30.

Let me see now, Wednesday night means Amos 'n Andy of course but more than that it also means Rolfe and his Lucky Strike dance orchestra too, WJZ at 9.30. don't miss it. Also, it's a new series just starting due to the great demand for more music of this sort.

An increase of 6,000 persons living on farms in New York State during the last year was revealed.

DO YOU SUFFER FROM CONSTIPATION?

"Countless remedies are advertised for constipation. Many relieve for the moment but they are habit forming and must be continued. Others contain calomel and dangerous mineral drugs, which remain in the system, settle in the joints and cause aches and pains. Some are laxative purgatives which cramp and gripe and leave a depressed after effect.

Avoid lubricating oils which only grease the intestines and encourage sluggish machinery to become lazy.

PHILHARMONIC PLANS SEASON

The Philharmonic-Symphony Society has announced plans for next season, the eighty-ninth since the Philharmonic Orchestra was founded in New York and the fifty-ninth since its consolidation in 1928 with the Symphony Society, then fifty years old. There will be a series of twenty concerts with the combined orchestras with the first on next October 2, continuing to April 19.

The announcement confirms what the Philharmonic-Symphony has done in this year's clash of conductors and orchestras, namely, that does not include the name of Willem Mengelberg.

He will direct for sixteen weeks, from November 4 to January 18 and from February 23 to the last concert. Bernardino Molinari will fill the five weeks interval between Mr. Toscanini's two periods, as he has done for three seasons.

The board of directors has under serious discussion the conclusion for the first eight weeks of the season," the statement adds, "and an announcement will be made shortly."

Ninety-nine regular subscription concerts in New York will include, at Carnegie Hall, two series of thirteen Thursday evenings each, two series of thirteen Friday afternoons; two series of eight Sunday afternoons and two series of nine Saturday evening students' concerts. The seven Sunday afternoons at the Metropolitan Opera House and six Sunday afternoons at the Brooklyn Academy also will be continued.

WAUPOOS, April 8—(By Mail)—On Wednesday evening a small crowd gathered at the United Church to hear the Temperance Speaker, Mr. F. W. Lewis of Toronto. Rev. J. R. Smyth of Wellington, was in charge of the meet ing. Mr. Lewis used the wonderful story of the return of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage, led by Moses, as an illustration of the modern liquor traffic problem. He said that we had reached the verge of solving the problem a few years ago, but like the Israelites at the boundary of the promised land, the majority of us at the very last thought the future obstacles would be too big to overcome. So the unbelieving majority would have to be "no more" before the believing minority. We were children of liquor bondage could go on to victory with God's help.

After the meeting an executive was nominated for a temperance organization in North Marysburgh.

PROHIBITION IS NOT IN FAVOUR

The Saturday Review of Literature, a non-political magazine and one of the outstanding literary publications of America, comes out flatly against prohibition in an editorial in its current issue in which it declares that the law nourishing tremendous enterprises has been superseded by a war on the moderate drinker.

The Review says that "the present disturbance over the Eighteenth Amendment is like a symptom of fever of society."

"The temperance movement was making progress toward bringing about greater self control, but with the publication of the Volstead Act the advent of prohibition the movement was "kidnapped by a reformer and went wrong."

"The whole of literature is available to the Review continues, "to prove that self control can be learned but that self denial must be instituted quickly. Literature as a whole is a blazing argument for temperance, but a bomb for prohibition. The vast majority of students and lovers of literature are humanists in this respect as in others. They are for temperance, but not for prohibition."

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" is cited as a book that depicted what might have happened during the slavery period and according to the Review "someone will write "The Uncle Tom's Cabin" of prohibition.

"It will not be another "Ten Nights in a Barroom" or "John Barleycorn" the editorial says. "There is little new to be said on the evils of unrestrained alcoholism." Nevertheless, it believes that the book "will be a novelty, for it will show how temperance in the U.S.A. went wrong."

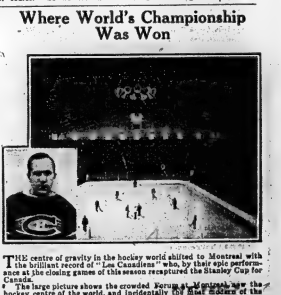
Find Largest of Petrified Forests

New Haven, Conn., April 9—Professor R. Wieland, research associate in Paleobotany at Yale University, has discovered what is perhaps the largest and oldest of all petrified forests, it was learned here today. In the course of his field work in the San Juan basin of New Mexico, Professor Wieland obtained specimens of many varieties of trees. In addition to the hardwoods, splendid cycad trees were obtained, mainly through the courtesy of the leaders of the Navajo country and of the Navajos themselves who, Professor Wieland said, are the keepers of souls when it comes to hunting rare and unusual petrifactions.

The collection of petrified material gathered by Professor Wieland contains palmlike trees, tree ferns, pines, together with bones of turtles and dinosaurs. All these lived in what is now the Mesozoic division of the upper Cretaceous time, which is estimated to have been about 440,000,000 years ago. Then the great interior "Sierra Sea" stretched from the region of the present Gulf of Mexico to the Arctic Ocean, and the present San Juan Mesa region constituted a great flat country o fswamps and bayous.

VALUE OF SPY OVER ESTIMATED

VIENNA — "The public has since ideas about the value of a spy and the importance of espionage; no high command would ever base its activities on a spy's report. Hundreds of such papers arrive every month. The planned Austrian general attack gainst Italy in the Spring of 1916 came to the knowledge of General Cadorna, but as the spy who furnished the report was believed to be the Italians to be untrustworthy they paid no attention to it.



"After the collapse of the Dual Monarchy in the autumn of 1918 I was chief of the Intelligence Service at the Austrial headquarters at Baden, near Vienna. We had to decide quickly whether to act like archivists or gentlemen. We decided for the latter course. So we burned thousands of documents which would otherwise have ruined the post-war status of many citizens who had done espionage work for the old empire against the irredentist movements of their compatriots. Some remaining documents caused enough stir, especial in Czechoslovakia."

Fashionably Speaking

By Lucille

Dear Reader:—

There is nothing so rejuvenating to one's midwinter costume, which now seems so dowdy, as a new hat. For this reason spring hats make an earlier appearance each year. For the past two seasons, there has been no little to distinguish a spring hat from one for fall, for felt was the favoured medium, and only a radical change in its shape could give it any individuality.

Now dear reader there has been an overwhelming revolution in spring millinery. Straws, which made a tentative appearance last year, have taken possession and windows of, hat shops are gay with many versions of this mode. Women have welcomed them eagerly, and straw hats have been worn for weeks past.

The styles this season, in hats, are in keeping with the accepted return to "feminine" fashions. Crotchet and lacey straws give an elegance that is in complement to the graceful gowns

HAT STREAMERS

Of course your new spring hat has ribbon streamers

That hang way down your back—an even two;

And so did mine and so did your grandmother's.

I wonder why all little girls' hats do?

Perhaps so that small winds can find them playthings

When they hop up from teasing daffodils

While big winds are kept busy swaying elm tops

And rustling through the cedars on high hills!

Perhaps so that, when playing tag, the tagger

Can catch you when you are running, turned around!

Or, maybe, not for any single reason

That ever has or ever will be found!

with which they are worn. And then, for the tailleur, there are smart little models in simple styles. The colours are those of springtime, greens, bright blues with the ever popular black still leading.

Easter Sunday used to be the day for spring finery to make its debut, but of late years Good Friday finds the majority of people wearing their new clothes for the first time. Some, of course, prefer to wait till Sunday, and have done so, only to find that when Good Friday was warm and lovely, Easter Sunday brought showers of rain or a drop in the temperature.

Whatever day spring costumes make their appearance there is one thing certain and that is that Belleville women will rival Ritz in the chic of their attire, if week-end shopping was any indication. On Friday and Saturday of last week the shops were crowded, for the first warm days enable us to make everyone think clothes. Time to think of yours.

Fashionably yours,

RUDY SUED FOR MILLION DOLLARS

Los Angeles, April 9—A suit for $1,000,000 damages, charging Rudy Vallee, movie and radio singer, with pirating a song was filed in Superior Court today by an attorney for Robert Lee Mackoldeck.

The young woman's complaint alleged that she wrote a song some two years ago which was submitted for copyright but not offered publicity. She avers that a copy of the song came into the possession of Vallee and his associate, Leon Zimmerman, who is named a co-defendant, and that they made use of it after slight word changes.

An injunction restraining Vallee from further use of the song and an accounting of profits is demanded.

Francis Gilbert, Rudy Vallee's attorney, said yesterday that he understood the suit involved "The Vagabond Lover." Vallee and Zimmerman, he said, collaborated on the words and music.

"You can say," he continued, "that Mr. Vallee hasn't any fear of the consequences of this suit, the existence of which he just heard today. He does not know Miss McKay. It is strange how many people have written him about that song, claiming to have written it or to know some one who did.

"All of them wrote after the song had been a success for a long time. I wonder why Miss McKay didn't make her claim sooner? A year and a half is a long time to wait."

Suit was brought for $500,000 dam-

In Women's Sphere

The first woman to be nominated for membership in the Authors' Club, New York City, is Miss Ida Tarbell, after a new ruling last week to admit women to full membership in the organization, of which John Erskine is president. While the club was founded fifty years ago, presidents and governors writers were almost negligible in number in the United States while today the honours are shared almost equally between the two sexes. The only woman ever to receive honorary membership in the club was Harriet Beecher Stowe. Miss Tarbell was accepted unanimously, and other famous women writers will receive invitations to join.

The city government of Yellville, small mountain town of North Arkansas, will pass into feminine hands this coming year. An all-women ticket has been elected without opposition and indications are that the appointive offices, even to that of Town Marshal will be filled by women.

According to a certain guide in the Canadian Rockies, members of the fair sex are much better behaved on mountain trails than men. The guide in question, in describing some of his experience on expeditions in the Rockies, particularly in Jasper Park region, candidly expressed a preference for the conduct of women tenderfeet. He explained that city-bred man or a man of small acquaintance with woodcraft and riding ponies along precipitous trails, always supposed that he was capable of correcting his guide's errors, if any. The consequence was there were disagreements, not so say perilous moments, when harmony was necessary to a quick decision. A woman, he continued, was willing to concede her ignorance of procedure, and placed complete confidence in her guide.

Ann Dodd Dead at 105

WINCHESTER, Mass., April 7—Mrs. Anne A. Dodd, the oldest resident of this town and a former resident of Prince Edward Island died here on March 30 at the home of her niece, Mrs. Emma Trowman, at the age of 105 years.

Miss Dodd was born in Liverpool, England, and went to Prince Edward Island with her family when she was a little girl. She lived there until she was 18 and then moved to Boston.

Despite her years Miss Dodd maintained an active interest in current affairs. She was a great lover of birds and every Spring she used to watch for them to come from the South. She knew the name of each bird and could name them by their song. When asked for a suggestion as to how to live a long life she always said, "Don't worry, and have an interest in life."

NOMINAL COSTS FOR MEALS AT NEW COLLEGIATE

A feature little known about Belleville's new collegiate and vocational school is the cafeteria, located on the third floor of the new building, spick and span with regards to cleanliness and modern in every detail. Under the capable directorship of Mrs. Mc-Fee, a member of the Board of Education, the lunch room is run on a strictly cost basis and practically no profit on any commodity is made.

Every day parents of families can well afford to have their children get a hot, substantial meal in the cafeteria, for it is the proud boast of that institution that a full meal can be served for the price of seventeen cents.

For instance, here are a few of the foods that are served in the restaurant, and their prices. Coffee and tea retail at three cents a cup, while a half pint of milk can be bought for four cents. A bowl of soup, with tea, soda biscuits, set for five cents and sandwiches, good big ones, are sold for the same price. A slice of ham, with a side order of potatoes and one slice of bread and butter can be purchased for the lowly sum of ten cents while an order of pork and beans, with bread and butter is offered for five cents. Meat, pies and sheared pies sell for five cents each. In the line of deserts, jello and cream can be had for cents and ice cream may also be bought at the same price.

Although two girls work each noon hour serving the lunch, they do not wait upon the student-customers. The lunch room is run on a cafeteria style and the pupils go to the rear of the room, pick up a tray and decide what they want to eat, carrying the tray to the table to choose forks and eating knives, forks and spoons from convenient receptacles.

One hundred and sixty pupils can be accommodated in the cafeteria at at one time. This will give an estimate of the size of the lunch room. Four women handle all the dispensing of food.

It is not necessary to buy a complete meal in the lunch room. A pupil can take a bit of lunch from home and eat it there and buy a glass of milk if they desire. As a matter of fact it is computed that that many of their lunches in the cafeteria as this saves littering up the class room and hall with the remains of lunches.

Correct Manners

Mrs. Cornelia Beekman

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

At a high school banquet given recently for our football boys it was generally conceded that the banquet was to be formal. Some of the girls wore hats and short dresses, others wore hats and dinner frocks; others wore evening frocks and nothing on their heads. Later a discussion arose between A and B. A insisted that it was perfectly correct to wear a hat if one chose, either to a formal luncheon or formal dinner. B agreed with the first point, but not with the latter. Please solve their problem and help if you can for they are depending on you.

T.O.

Since it was decided that the banquet was to be formal the girls should have dressed formally for it. That is, they should have worn evening dresses and no hats. This is the attire that is appropriate to a formal dinner—and usually a banquet is a formal dinner—

And of course, the boys, too, should have formal dress. Most the girls should have worn dinner dresses and without hats. Women used to wear sport dresses seems to me not careful of the compliment that they should pay to the formal affair.

No, it is not correct to wear hats to a formal dinner—never. To a formal luncheon one wears a hat and wears the hat, moreover, during the luncheon. Now, indeed, often one sees the hostess of a formal luncheon wearing her hat also.

(Mrs. Beckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

FASHION FANCIES

The Evening Mode is Blushing

The pink of perfection is the happy condition in which the evening mode finds itself meeting Spring. Fabric favorites such as satin, taffeta, chiffon, crepe and net are blushing rosily. The flush may be of the most delicate pink hues, or again it may deepen into a shade that borders on rose, but regardless of its tint it may be sure of its fashion popularity as long as it is pink. One shade recently introduced by an eminent Paris couturier is a lively opaline rose, and already it is accepted as an outstanding success.

It is a soft satin in the weight that develops the lovely evening frock sketched above. A bouquet of roses suggests the bolero that is seen on practically all the new dresses.

Black Diamonds Took Three Points From Plaule Wilkins at 7-Alleys

In the Latter Afternoon games the Peaches took three points to Prodans in a very close game, there being but ten pins difference in the total score. High bowlers were Mrs. Kelly and Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Cherrace for the Prodans. Nine singles were Mrs. Kelly 77 and 174, Mrs. Goodfellow 180, Mrs. Cherrace 163, Mrs. Campbell 184, Mrs. Arnold 162, Mrs. Prodan 163 and 166, Mrs. Jones 177 and 183.

In the Junior League Winnie Wilkins and the Black Diamonds met with a result, Winnie Wilkins one point and Black Diamonds three. Joe Frawley, a new bowler this season, set the pace with 713 for three games including a single of 238, 263, 192. Vi Wilkins was next high with 591 including a single of 203, 195 and 226.

Other fine singles were N. Sly 192, J. Kelley 227, Woods 192, J. Graham 201, 196.

In the second Junior game Hornets and Night Hawks met. Night Hawks taking one point and Hornets three, the singles were Peg Burke 200, 221, Mrs. Westlake 197, Wynn 183, Shaddick 185, Steed 218, Curr's 272, 192.

Today's prize winners practice bowling — Grimmon, Sinclair, Dixon, Taylor, Miss Rogers.

Capt. Bert Hardwick of the Ontario Peaches states that it's team are real bowlers when there is something at stake, and when he looked over the Peaches' record breaking score, no doubt thought what easy pickings they were in the last junior league played. At any rate he challenges the Peaches to a game for "a supper." It is doubtful if the Peaches will pass up when free eats are in sight. So the game will likely take place at the "Y" alleys shortly.

Gains Three Strokes On Chicago Player In Pinehurst Tournament

Pinehurst, N.C., April 9—Totaling 147 strokes each for the 36-hole qualifying round, C. Ross Somerville, London, Ont., and John Dawson, Chicago contender, tied for the medalist's honors yesterday in the 36th annual North and South amateur golf tournament, Dawson added a 75 to his 72 of the day before, when he led the field by three strokes at the end of the first 18 holes. Somerville evened the tables and added a brilliant 72 to his 75.

Forbes K. Wilson of York Harbor, Maine, former Maine State amateur champion, and George J. Voigt of New York, the defending champion, tied for third place, each with 152. Both Wilson and Voigt had rounds of 76 today and yesterday. Wilson, however, after his excellent shooting for both days, is free from tournament.

ROY CONFIDENT OF RING VICTORY

Sammy Hackett of Toronto Will Face Roy At Montreal

Montreal, April 9—Facing an opponent who recently took a non-title decision from Jack Sharkey, Leo "Kid" Roy, veteran leader of the Canadian featherweight title will defend his crown here tonight when Sammy Hackett, aggressive little Toronto fighter. The match will be the feature of a three-bout, 10 rounds each, card sponsored by the Grand Avenue Hockey Club and Alex Moore, local promoter, and will inaugurate the Spring boxing season at The Forum, scene of championship fights last week, but, as it stood, crowds still will be used for the bouts.

The other matches also promise good entertainment. Pete Sanatro, Montreal, who has gained a good following in his appearances here will tie up with Oliver Hart, Milwaukee, in a 10-round flyweight match. Roger Bernard a French Canadian lightweight, recent sensation in his division in the Detroit district, will be up against the hard hitting Jackie Cohen of New York in the third set-to.

While Roy "on the call to defend his title after a gruelling match at Toronto a few weeks ago, his backers consider that the knee edge of his younger and more aggressive opponent, gained in that bout, will stand him in good stead. Both fighters claim to be at the top of their form.

Following disposal of the bridge contract the matter of accepting the plans for the filtration plant was taken up. Mr Storrs of the firm of Gore, Nasmith and Storrs of Ottawa was in attendance and explained in detail the plans and specifications of the new plant. He produced a prospective of the new plant. Which was much admired by the members of the council. The plans have been in the city for some time and are complete in every detail. The tenders have been called for this immediate work and will close on April 2. The council at their regular committee meeting of April 14 will consider the tenders which will have been submitted. There are eight tenders now still providing one contractor tenders on the complete job but it is expected that no contractor will take on the entire work. After a thorough discussion and explanations as to certain features by Mr. Storrs of the council passed the recommendation "that plans and specifications of Gore, Nasmith and Storrs for new filtration plant by Mr. Storrs be and are hereby accepted."

MANCHESTER NH., April 9.—The Manchester Union in commenting editorially on the proposed signalling of the Canadian border says:

"The proposal of the Treasury Department to seek an agreement with Canada limiting all entrance to and exit from the United States on the Canadian border to approximately six hundred ports of entry will be received by the man in the streets with questions. Monkton, Que., April 8—Work on the grain-carrying system of the harbour terminal system is being done with the prospects that it will be all complete by the time of the opening of the navigation season. Workmen are busy on the gentry grain loader at shed 2 and by the time the largest liners are due to dock at sheds 1, 2, 3 and 4 they will be fed with grain under the new conditions, which will reduce the number of hours to load grain into their holds to about half.

Last summer the Harbour Commissioners installed sheds 7 and shed 9 the heavy structure required to improve the method of feeding grain to the bigger liners and the change was proven eminently successful with the result it was decided to go ahead at the remainder of the positions in which these could be used to the greatest advantage.

Using the old method of discharging grain from the elevator into the barges vessels were moored in shallow water and standing well out of the water, the flow of grain was often so retarded that the spouts leading at an angle giving insufficient, gravity to force the grain into the holds, thus time was lost. This has been remedied in the new installations and by the opening of navigation possibility of such delay will have disappeared.

TRENTON AND DISTRICT

Veteran Cadi Is Hale and Hearty at Seventy-Seven

Police Magistrate O'Rourke Has Presided on Bench For Thirty Years

TRENTON, Ont., April 9.—(Special by Staff Reporter).—A well known figure in the life of Trenton, and one who is respected and loved by all who know him, is Mr. T. A. O'Rourke, B.A., B.C.L., L.L.B., Police Magistrate for the town of Trenton and surrounding district. Mr. O'Rourke, although approaching his seventy-seventh birthday, is still hale and hearty, and presides with judicial justice over the destinies of the Trenton Police Court, as he has done for close on to thirty years.

Perhaps the one thing which shows more than any other the true character of Magistrate O'Rourke is that in all his years on the Bench as Police Magistrate, he has never had one of his decisions reversed by an Appeal Court, and as he says—"there have been quite a few appeals". That is a record which can hardly be equalled by any Police Magistrate in the Dominion with anywhere near the same length of service.

Magistrate O'Rourke was born in Trenton in 1853, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh O'Rourke, who came to Trenton direct from Ireland. Thus it will be seen that the present magistrate comes of real pioneer stock, the kind of stock which has made Canada the country it is today. Mr. O'Rourke remembers Trenton when he was a lad as being of not over two or three hundred population, for the most part being made up of cedar swamp, while the one big industry of the town was the Gilmore sawmill, which employed a large number of men.

Gaining his early education here, Mr. O'Rourke graduated as a Bachelor of Arts from Toronto University in 1878. Later, at Trinity College, he obtained his B.C.L. degree, —Bachelor of Civil Law, Queen's University was the next seat of learning which he attended, and from that institution he graduated with the L.L.B. degree—Bachelor of Laws. When he graduated at Toronto University, he was the gold medallist in his class. His hundreds of friends in Trenton wish him many more years to carry on his work in Trenton

Trenton Council to Lay Pavement

Will Spend $100,000 to Improve Roads in Neighbouring Town

TRENTON, Ont., April 9.—(Special by Staff Reporter). — An important meeting of the Trenton Town Council was held last night in the Council Chambers, all the aldermen and Mayor Fraser being in attendance. The customary monthly bills were ordered paid, and a delegation from the Trenton Horticultural Society asking for a grant of one hundred and fifty dollars was heard. Their request will receive all due consideration.

A request was heard from a resident of Alfred Street asking for a drain to be placed on that street, while another wanted a street light placed on Louise street.

For over an hour the discussion of the Council centred on the paving of streets and the laying of sidewalks in the city. It is expected that this summer the town will spend $100,000.00 on paving streets. Over two and a half miles of streets will be paved and this includes the main arteries leading into the town from the north. These roads at present are in bad shape, being quite rough.

Upper Front Street from the end of the present pavement to the Canadian National railway subway, on the west side of the river is one of the streets which will be payed, while Sidney Street, from the Provincial Highway north to the C.P.R. Station, is another which will be greatly improved this summer. The road from Front street to the Northwest Town Limits, better known as the Wooler Road, will also be payed to meet the pavement which will be laid by the Provincial government from Wooler to Trenton limits.

Tweed Driver to Face Charge

Frank Foster Blames Accident to His Need of Sleep

TRENTON, Ont., April 9.—(Special by Staff Reporter).—Frank Foster of Tweed, will face a charge of reckless driving as a result of an auto accident which occurred here on Monday night. Mr. Foster ran over the curb on Dundas street about eleven-thirty at night, broke off a lamp post and continued on into the ditch. Considerable damage was done to his car, and the lamp post will have to be replaced, so all in all it was an expensive accident.

Mr. Foster explained to the police that he had been driving for several hours and must have fallen asleep. He will likely appear in Trenton police court tomorrow.

RADIO BILL WILL BE LAID OVER

Special Committee Will Deal With the Question of Nationalization

OTTAWA, April 9—A declaration to the Commons yesterday by Hon. Pierre J. A. Cardin, Minister of Marine, to the effect that the radio report will be referred to a Special Committee, and that there will be no bill submitted to the House "at the present time" is being taken to mean that there will be no nationalization of radio move before the election, at all events.

The questions and answers relating to the matter in the Commons were as follows:

Abraham A. Heaps (Labor, Winnipeg)—May I inquire of the minister if we are to have the radio bill before recess?

Hon. Mr. Cardin—The matter is to be referred to a Special Committee, which is to be appointed in a day or two.

Mr. Heaps—There will be no bill introduced in the House?

Hon. Mr. Cardin—Not at present The report itself will be referred to committee.

MELROSE COULPE WERE HONORED BY NEIGHBOURS

SHANNONVILLE, April 8.—A very pleasant gathering was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. McLaren, Melrose, it being the occasion of the 25th anniversary of their wedding day. A number of friends and relatives took this opportunity to tender Mr. and Mrs. McLaren a surprise.

They received numerous gifts of silver from their relatives while friends and neighbours presented them with a cabinet of silver. Little Miss Irene Lasier presented the bride with a beautiful bouquet of spring flowers after which the following address was read by Mrs. Jack Milligan.

Mr. McLaren thanked his many friends in a few well chosen remarks.

Shannonville, April 4, 1930.

"Dear Mr. and Mrs. McLaren.—Joy intermingled with feelings of affection and admiration has prompted us to gather tonight around your fireside. From its blaze during the past twenty five years has proceeded a light as gen tle and as radiant as ever lent charm to the endearments of domestic life.

"Throughout those years your home has stood as an example of true happiness and your lives of Christian virtues. Therefore we are delighted to have this opportunity of showing our appreciation of your merits, and we greet you with the heartiest congratulations, backward to the day you emerged from backward to lonely you emerged from the mutual bower. There we find you Mrs. McLaren in charming girlhood, bright with ambitions and hopes for the future. Assuming the role of wife, mother, friend, you upheld the vows of the wedding-day and fulfilled them nobly.

"Here a hearty laugh, there a sympathetic word, yonder a kind act—all contributing to the happiness of your home or your neighbour. Through your fidelity and loyalty to your husband you made it possible for him to devote time and energy to municipal affairs.

"And Will, as husband, father, citizen, you discharged your responsibilities with zeal. Throughout your sojourn in the municipal arena we admired you for your qualities of staunchness and sportsmanship and for the courage of your convictions, which you manifested in your undertakings. To-night we congratulate you on "a noble part well played".

"In virtue of the respect and esteem you both hold in this community, and as a memento of this event, we ask you to accept these gifts which carry with them best wishes for health and prosperity.

"Time, the destroyer of charm and sportiveness has dealt leniently with you. Youthfulness, good humour, merriment, still pervade your home atmosphere. Age cannot wither your kind hearts, your buoyant spirits, your maxims of youth. You have reached the silver wedding-day with hearts young, and faces as bright as the polished silver itself reflecting the happiness around you.

"We hope, dear friends, that the sparkling sighs of today will change gloriously into the golden wedding day that the happy vista of earthly bliss will extend down the path of life amid troops of friends and loving memories. (Signed on behalf of your friends and neighbours).

Mr. and Mrs. E.J. Lasier,
Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Osborne,
Mr. James Lasier,
Mr. and Mrs. Jack Milligan."

Sweetheart—or Just a Listening Post?

Which Are You? Asks Miss Fairfax

BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX
An Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

Is there one type of woman that a man loves, and marries, and another, the sisterly type, that he merely tells his troubles to?

Are there certain girls who seem fated to win more from men than friendship? Good, companionable, intelligent girls of practical ability whom men are comfortably at ease with but never for a moment lose their heads over?

In a way, I am afraid this is true.

Yet I know such cases are not hopeless. So if there are any girls who suspect they are in danger of failing into the help-sister class, and staying there, I advise them to do something about it without delay.

Two girls who are in precisely this predicament and who sign themselves "Lonesome Chums" have written to me for help. They are twenty years old, and "not bad-looking." They are not in demand as sweethearts, but their men friends are always begging them to promote their love affairs with other girls. Their love affairs end happily and the girls who have helped to bring them about are of course forgotten. "Lonesome Chums" feel that they deserve some attention on their own merits and a lover apiece.

Both girls as these have to suffer for their own virtues. Undoubtedly boys take advantage of their sweet unselfishness. They are sure to make the best kind of wives and mothers later on, but I think they need to begin right away to learn how to handle men.

I do not mean by this, Lonesome Chums, that I advise you to become vamps. Keep right on being the good sports that you already are.

It sometimes happens that two girls who are especially good friends make the mistake of seeing so much of each other and perhaps unconsciously cultivating each other that to onlookers they seem almost to have almost one personality—and only one. This is a serious drawback to attracting men, for a man can't be interested in a girl who appears not to be single. If you think this suggestion applies to you suppose you try to become as different as possible. Don't dress alike or act alike or talk alike or have the habit of doing the same things. This will make you more interesting to men and women both.

As for the boys you already know, I am afraid you can't do much with them. But the next time you meet a new young man control your desire to begin to do things for him right away. Stifle your nice, natural mother-impulse for the time being. Instead, let the benevolence be at least as thirty-fifty basis and make it possible, even necessary, for him to do things for you. Things that he thinks he can do well and is proud of doing, and likes to be pleased for.

Then, after he has been sufficiently nice and obliging, invite him to make one of a small informal group at supper or cards. In giving such a party, don't invite all your girl friends at once. I think your men friends will learn to appreciate you more quickly if you keep these groups reduced in size.

If you offer food to these guests, see that it is good.

And if you have a card party, work hard to make it go!

If, after this, a friendly relationship is established, don't be too willing and easy in the matter of making dates with the young men. Try being just the least bit difficult, now and then.

I suppose it is not necessary for me to mention that it will help you very much if you know how to be lively and amusing. And that it is of the utmost importance to take proper care of your hair, complexion and clothes.

The best of luck to you, Lonesome Chums.

YES, APOLOGIZE IF YOU ANNOY PEOPLE

BY MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

We are three sisters living in an apartment. I am the eldest. There is two years difference in the age of my other sister and twelve years between myself and the youngest one. I frequently get employer and his wife to spend the evening at our apartment. Both he and she are younger by three or four years than I am. The question we want decided is whether they my two younger sisters should be present when they entertain? Both shook hands with them, but remained seated.

My sisters contend that as my employer and his wife were my guests, they were not rude in remaining seated. Both my sisters shook hands with them. They had also met before. Is this good form?

S.—When an usher at the theatre indicates the seats for one or more people, and these seats are so located that one must pass or disturb other people in getting to them, would it be more polite to say "Pardon me" or "Thank you?" I contend that as the people have already risen, it would be more proper to say "Thank you." "Pardon me" suggests a service yet to be complied with; while "Thank you" suggests appreciation for a service already complied with.

B.—Would it be proper to say "Thank you" to the usher after she indicates the seats to be taken? Or is that a courtesy a patron should take for granted?

R.B.

Yes, your sisters should have risen when your employer and his wife came to your home. Although technically they were your guests, really also they were the guests of our sisters too, since you are all in a small co-hostesses. They should always rise when your guests come to your home and you should rise when you are greeting any guests that they invite to the home. This is very important, and I hope that you will talk it over with your sisters, and convince them that they are co-hostesses in this home that you all share. If any or you remains seated while the other or others are greeting guests, the guests would quite correctly interpret this as socially unsure and awkward. As a matter of fact, it is better to err on the side of rising when it is not exactly necessary than not to rise when it is necessary. This is a good thing to keep in mind!

2. A good question, this, and one that often comes to my mind, too under the circumstances that you set forth. And I agree with you that if the people have risen, it is more sensible and gracious to say, "Thank you." The last sentence of your question is a perfect one, and covers many occasions.

3. Yes: a polite person would say, quite naturally, "Thank you" to the usher, even for a service that is in the line of duty. "Thank you" should never be spared. Like the famous "quality of mercy" of which we hear in "The Merchant of Venice," "Thank you" is blessèd in him that gives and him that takes.

Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

THE MILL

Charles Sloan Reid

A few clouds were draped about the western sky, as the sun looked in through the tree tops from the east and slanted down across the moss-covered shingles of the little old grist mill on Walnik Creek. The overshot wheel had turned to the force of the waters pouring through the mill race for seventy odd years. Sol Rainey had inherited it from his father at the old man's death more than fifty years before.

It was mill-house and residence to Sol Rainey and his old wife Mary Jones. There were but two rooms, one in which the mill stood, the other in which the aged couple slept, prepared their meals, and ate them. The routine had been the same, every day of the year for more than fifty years. There were no children.

Sol was bent with age, while Mary Jane's stooped shoulders seemed forever shrinking away from the weary burden. The turns of corn that came to the mill were small, and they came but too frequently. A few chickens stood across the roadway, where Sol Rainey's battened a couple of tolls of toll of the mill and from the toll thesgrate wrate from his table.

Sol was bent with age, while Mary Jane's stooped shoulders seemed forever shrinking away from the weary burden. The turns of corn that came to the mill were small, and they came but too frequently. A few chickens stood across the roadway, where Sol Rainey's battened a couple of tolls of toll of the mill and from the toll thesgrate wrate from his table.

Sol had plodded away from the mill, beyond an occasional neighborhood meeth. Both he and she were younger by the couple since their marriage fifty-five years before. There was a small clear of field, visible through a narrow break in the timber, where Sol had grown fifty-five crops of corn, rolling the rocks from one side to another and dabb g at the little blades of grass with the corner of his hoe. Only in season, while Mary Jane attended to the small patronage at the mill.

Old Sol came from the house, cross ed the road with a swill pail, and dumped the contents of it into the pig-sty. Then he hung over the rail ing of the pen to watch the hungry hogs fight for the larger share.

"It 'pears like these hogs ain't a growing none too fast. Looks mighty 'an' hit'll take no less'n three hundred pound weight to get us through from one killin' to another."

As he turned backward toward the house, Mary Jane came to the door way. "Solomon, that sick chicken's dead," she announced.

Sol paused, and ran his fingers through his hair. "Pears like hard 'arks a followin' us right on, Mary Jane," he observed. "How that chicken would 'a helped right now." Stooping he pulled a piece of sole leather from the bottom of his shoe. "An' look a there! I got to patch this shoe for another pair o' shoes, come winter A'in't no sich luck as goin' through another winter wi' these."

"Then it'll ha' to be for two pairs, Solomon. These here new shoes you can't take another patch, for there ain't nobbin' to patch on."

"It shore is hard, Mary Jane — it shore is!"

"It shore is!" The old lady sighed from the depths of her soul.

"An' there's the old water wheel—it's got some terrible holes in them old buckets, an' it 'pears like I've patched an' patched till that ain't nothin' left to patch with—an' new boards come terrible high, you know."

The sound of hoof beats came from beyond a curve in the road and Sol and Mary Jane turned their gaze in the direction of the sound, expectantly. But the rider was Ezra Palfrey, Mary Jane's brother, who lived a mile to top of the mountain a mile away. He stopped his-mule in front of the house

"Lo, Sol! Lo, Mary, Jane!" he greeted.

"Lo, Ezry! What's bringin' ye out so early?"

"Jes, rid down to tell ye we-uns are goin' to have a little good eatin' up t' our house t'night. Jake got a wild turkey over on Scaley Ridge this mornin'. Want you an' Mary Jane to come up."

"Mebbe, Ezry, mebbe."

"We'll be lookin' for ye." Palfrey rode away without further words.

Sol followed after him with his gaze "Reckon we kin go, Mary Jane? It's a long time since I et turkey"

"I don't know, Solomon. Reckon things'll go on all right about the place here, while we're gone? You know, 'ain't long we've ever been away from here?"

"So it ain't—so it ain't."

"But I reckon it we go, that hog joint we started on'll last a lettle longer."

"I reckon."

The day dragged through. Half a dozen times Sol and Mary Jane discussed the proposed visit to Ezra Palfrey's for the evening. At last they found themselves setting off up the road, just as the sun was setting behind a rather heavy cloud. As the limber's edge both turned simultaneously, and gazed back upon the little old log house for a long moment.

A tramp of twenty minutes brought them to Palfrey's. The fore part of the evening was half gone, when Sol Rainey rose to go. A clap of thunder drowned the words he was uttering as he announced his intentions.

"Hm, what's that?" he exclaimed, looking toward the heavens through the board roof of Palfrey's cabin.

"A storm comin', like as not," offered Palfrey.

All hurried to the doorway for a look at the sky. What they saw was a cloud that covered the heavens, out of whose angry blackness darted zig-zag shafts of lightning so keen and bright that the eyes were dazzled. Palfrey backed his guests from the doorway and shoved in the door.

"Can't go out in the face of that lightin'," he declared, and Sol Rainey dropped back into a chair with a thud The storm broke over the hills with a crash that seemed to split the solid rocks of the cliffs and twist the trees into spirals of writhing green.

"As well spend the night," said Pel frey.

Sol and Mary Jane shook heads with determination: but the storm settled the question for them. There was no setting off through such weather. Even the staunch cabin of Palfrey shook before the blast, and there was little conversation for an hour, while the fury of it lasted. Then the rain poured.

A bed was made for Solomon and Mary Jane, and they lay down, but not to sleep. Mary Jane was thinking of her chickens, and Sol was thinking of the hogs across the roadway, and the weakness of the mill race walls; while through each ran a nervous fear.

With the morning came a cessation of the rain, and the calm that follows in the wake of a mountain storm. The sun came up over the hills, and a vapor arose from the wet roads.

"Bye, Ezry," said Solomon; we-uns' night.

mus' be goin'."

He swung into the mountain highway, with Mary Jane close at his heels Here and there along the way tall trees, which had withstood the blast of many a storm, were lying low, splintered and twisted. Down the road the old couple trudged, each busy with his or her own thoughts and fears.

At last they rounded the little curve at the edge of the timber, leading to the mill yard. Here, both stopped, as at the word of command, and gazed in open-mouthed horror at what they saw before them. Sol's hands were clasped over the top of his staff for support, as he felt his knees grow weak beneath him, while Mary Jane felt a sudden chill, as the blood seemed to stop its coursing through her veins.

There was not a piece left of the lit tle old mill house and home. The logs, splintered beyond reconition, and the overshot wheel, rent into a score of segments, were scattered up and down the little creek.

It was sometime before the old couple gathered strength enough to enable them to creep forward to the mill site. Mary Jane sank to the ground on the spot where the doorstep had been, the object by which the reach of her hand, and she caught it up tenderly. It was a skillet through which a gudgeon from the mill had torn a great hole during the gyrations of the storm.

"Solomon," she said, and tears stood in her eyes as she looked up into his face, "whatever did we go to Ezry's last night for?"

"I was jes' thinkin' to myself, Mary Jane," Sol replied, "what for?—what for?"

He sank to his knees and with his hand caressed a mill rock which had rolled to the spot during that wild night.

KITCHEN BRAINS

London, April 9—"We want the best brains in the kitchen and in the home," declared Miss Crowdry, Principal of the Crouch End High School and College, speaking at the school's 30th annual birthday dinner. She decried the common view that cooking and looking after the house was degrading. "Was typing a man's letter more ennobling?" she asked.

"When a girl who earns a certain income marries a man with a similar income, the parents are shocked that two should have to live on the income which kept only one before. But what is the good of a strong athletic girl if she cannot cook and do for herself and one young man? What does she want with another girl to come and help her?"

NOT SO LARGE IT SEEMS

With the development of the railways and the creation of new air links across the Dominion Canada is shrinking perceptibly. Distances which once upon a time and that not as long ago as the time of the fairy story age frightened the people and separated the country now bind.

Last week a glider flew across the United States from west to east. The same is possible in Canada.

The attitude of the old is more like the attitude of the young today—Canadians are not fearful of the distances. Modern scientific development and the resultant growth of the various parts of Canada make this new condition possible.

How Canadians will a quarter of a century hence look upon the map of their native land or of the land of their adoption remains to be seen.

LATE GEORGE NICOLSON

Many mourn the passing of George Nicolson, one of the best known and most highly esteemed agriculturists in this section. He made friends by the sterling qualities he possessed which made him a friend of every man, a zealot in doing little deeds of kindness and of love.

His fine social make-up was early recognized. He filled places of honor in so many fields that scarcely any activity existed which he was not called upon to adorn by acceptance of office. In church, in the fair board, in education, in the cheese industry and in the municipal field he found scope for his fine gifts. He was tireless and self-sacrificing, he was generous beyond measure, human kindness was a marked characteristic of his social endowment.

He preserved this tireless activity to the end of his life. He never spared himself and he lived to the age of eighty-two years. Relentless effort in the cause of everything that spelled good and progress did not lessen his life. Some men fail to live out an active life. That was not his failing.

Ripe in years, crowned with the honours which were showered upon him in so many fields, he has passed away, leaving a rich heritage of memory to that wide circle with which he came in contact in a long and well spent life. The honors which came his way were not those of his seeking for he was but anxious to serve not to be honored. His greatest desire was to be lived modest and yet firm and fearless, with a thought for others rather than for himself. He has shown in his long career that it is possible to live an intensely interesting life on the land so close to nature and to leave an abiding influence.

THE GLIDER

The glider—not a dancer as a terpsichorean might imagine—just a glider, a sort of machine which will glide, has started in its way to make history. It has crossed a continent.

So steps forward aviation in a form not quite expected. And it all happened within a few days. Frank M. Hawks who flew the glider in tow of an airplane did not make any great boasts of what he would do, he just did it.

This glider which spanned the continent probably is the forerunner of new ideas in aviation.

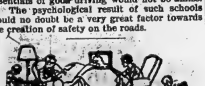
It may have this commercial value but it has another—an aesthetic delight which is thus described by Hawley Bowlus, "I am unable to describe in words the sublime pleasure one experiences in gliding over hills and valleys, silently like an eagle, cruising or hovering, rising or descending at will." He affirms that gliding is no more dangerous than riding a bicycle and nothing as dangerous as driving a motorcar. The gliding angle is so flat that there is no danger in landing. Lindbergh says it is second to no sport on earth.

The future looks bright for the development of the motorless plane.

AMUSEMENTS GET THE CROWDS

Toronto Telegram has a crisp comment on a phase of human nature which is of special interest to folk engaged in the entertainment business. It says:

"Anomalous though it may appear, places of amusement are the last to be overshadowed by a cloud of depression or to experience the pinch of hard times. The stock market may be shot to pieces, and unemployment may worry the statesmen, but through all the turmoil amusement stocks climb to new highs and lengthening queues at the box offices indicate that the public has ever more money to spend on entertainment. Perhaps it is that at such times the necessity for amusement is more keenly felt.



"With the continent still taking its daily laugh the clouds do not appear so dark as might be. For the amusement promoters, at any rate, the clouds seem to have a silver lining."

It is a known fact that in times of money stringency theatres are patronized well. The theatre seems a relief from the stress of financial epression. Idle is so in wartime.

ROAD TRAINING FOR MOTORISTS

Will there come a school of instruction for motorcar drivers? Probably there will. Gail Reporter favors a standard course of training for new drivers stating that careful drivers of well-balanced mentality and normal physical endowments seldom figure in motorcar accidents.

There may yet be a school for drivers who have been driving. A little brushing up on the essentials of good driving would not be amiss. The psychological result of such schools would no doubt be a very great factor towards the creation of safety on the roads.

LOVE'S VARIETY

Infinite variety!
This is what life brings,
Never granting you and me
Quite the self-same things.

For the poet everywhere
Glimpses poesy,
In the tranquil summer air,
In the willow-tree;

Poesy's bright self he finds
In the soaring lark,
In the voice of lilting winds
Through the star-strewn dark.

To the lover April yields
Thoughts of her he loves,
And down summer's ripening fields
One dear presence moves.

While the mother through her child
Sees life's every phase,
Joyous visions, undefiled,
Fill her happy days.

Infinite variety

ALMOST A NEWSPAPER HANDBOOK

Los Angeles is the newest of the city giants. While Southern California has been where it is for years, the population of considerably over a million hasn't been long located on the vast acreage known as Los Angeles. So it is with surprise the East will note that the current issue of the Annual Midwinter Number of "The Los Angeles Times" is the forty-eighth in the series. A year before the State of Washington was admitted into the Federal Union, General Otis began publishing the special edition which, under him and his successor, Mr. Chandler, has grown to such proportions and into such technical beauty and representative content.

There is the too-famous story of the orator who, after listening to other speakers on an abstruse theme, remarked that "if no one else wishes to discuss this subject I'd like to say a few words about the climate of California." The present Number says a few words on this and on many other topics relating to that earthly paradise by the shores of the Pacific. There are enough statistics in it to gratify the economist and convince the home-seeker and the business man desirous of a new location.

There are sections devoted to literature, art and science. This is due appreciation of the proximity of the movie and aviation capitals. And there is throughout a suggestion that the great new community is looking with ever-increasing concentration across the Pacific to the markets of the Orient. It is a notable newspaper product, as usual.

CULTURE IN JAIL

Conditions have changed greatly at Dartmoor prison since the days of which Galsworthy wrote in his play "Escape." The Dartmoor of the stage was represented as a remote and gloomy warehouse from which not even the most spirited prisoner might hope for mental or physical escape. But now it is developing an atmosphere more like that of a preschool than a prison.

A recent dispatch states that inmates are permitted to study, and a curriculum including history, arithmetic, geography and science is offered. A library of considerable extent is open to the prisoners, and they are housed in comfortable "studios" instead of the bare and cheerless cells of other days. Length of residence determines the amount of liberty allowed. After eighteen months of satisfactory conduct, "freshmen" are advanced to "Liberty Hall," and continued exemplary conduct insures such pleasant prerogatives as regular pocket money.

The customary jazz band is not lacking, and is conducted by a "lifer." Food is freed from institutional monotony, for no menu is repeated oftener than once in three weeks.

All that seems lacking is a football team or a crew. These, of course, would have to be confined to intra-mural activities. But ones they are inaugurated there will seem little difference between going up to Oxford and being sent up to Dartmoor—except for the small matter of idiom.

ENGLISH CHURCH ART FESTIVAL

Exhibition Planned to Promote Individual Art Work in Churches

LONDON, April 8—By the Canadian Press—London is to have a festival of English Church Art from June 16 to July 5 under the auspices of the Church Crafts League. The organizers wish to raise £15,000 and offer, for a subscription of £5.5s. a "Fellowship" which will admit to the exhibition, the conferences and the Abbey concluding service. "Friends" will pay £3 cents to enjoy the display and practically the whole of the Church Hall buildings, Westminster, will be utilized for dramatic performances, conferences, lectures and demonstrations and an exhibition of Church art.

In the preliminary announcement the organizers, headed by Rev. Jocelyn Perkins, rector of Westminster Abbey, draw attention to the commercial spirit which practically extinguished the individual artist-worker at the end of the 18th century and which was seriously combated by John Frederick Watts, John Ruskin and William Morris.

As the scene is to bring beauty into religion along the lines of mechanical art it is anticipated that the festival will receive considerable support. One art critic says: "It is to be hoped that efforts in the artistic scene will aim at the simplicity which most creeds profess and be more in keeping with contemporary feeling and less pseudo-tradition and a display of poor aesthetic sense since sound aesthetics are more calculated to call up honorable emotions than sentimentality in the form of fussy brass eagle, rows of mechanical tulips and machine-made raisins."

HUNTING WOLVES BY AUTOMOBILES

Manitoulin Light Keeper Chases Wolf Over Frozen Bay and Won

COBALT, Ont., April 8—by the Canadian Press—Did you ever drive an automobile at 65 miles an hour over glare ice? And did you ever try to catch a wolf with the machine?

These are questions asked by F. W. Mayor, magistrate for the district of Manitoulin, who has some interesting stories to tell about Lupe the Wolf.

Mr. Mayor recently outlined to The Canadian Press details of a wolf chase which took place at Meldrum Bay, Albert Grant, keeper of the lighthouse at Mississaga, was the hero, while the blot on the animal was played by one of the large wolves which infest the island.

"Grant saw a wolf on the ice," Mr. Mayor says, "He took out his automobile and the chase began. In such a chase of this kind, the wolf must not be allowed to get off the ice, of course, for the car could not follow him. The idea is to keep him running as fast as possible, in order to play him out. At first the wolf made great time, but gradually the speed of the automobile at times registering as high as 65 miles an hour.

"Up and down the ice they went at a tremendous pace, twisting and turning. When it came to dodging, the wolf had the better of the car, for he could turn quicker and retrace his steps, while the car had to slow down for the turn. The ice was glare and the danger of skidding great.

"On they went, while spectators on the shore cheered. Soon, however, Lupus began to show fatigue. Some times he fell, only to quickly regain his feet and tear away at top speed. It soon became evident that the wolf was exhausted, and with a final burst of speed he was caught.

"Isn't it cruel?" a woman spectator remarked.

"Yes, imagine that brute after an innocent little deer. How much sympathy would he have?" came with one voice."

TWEED COUPLE CELEBRATE 50TH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Craig Were Honoured by Friends

TWEED NEWS

On Monday, March 31st Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Craig of Tweed celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage by inviting to their home, their near relatives to the number of fifty, to partake of a wedding dinner with them.

Their marriage in 1880 took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Graham, in their lifetime widely known residents of the tenth concession of Hungerford and was performed by the Rev. Robert Walker.

For forty years Mr. and Mrs. Craig lived on a farm on the Lodge Room road, a short distance west of Tweed ten years ago taking up their residence in the village. The family consists of one daughter, Mrs. Cecil Stokes, residing near Tweed.

Among the guests from a distance who journeyed to Tweed to participate in the happy event, was, Rev. H. B. Kenny, of Consecon, a former President of the Bay of Quinte Conference of the Methodist Church, who is a cousin of Mrs. Craig.

At the conclusion of a sumptuous dinner, Rev. E. B. Cooke, acting as toast master, called upon Mr. R. T. Graham, a brother of the bride, who read an address most appropriately and congratulating them upon having reached the fiftieth anniversary of their married life and still being young, with hopes for many more years of happiness, following which Mr. F. B. Craig, a nephew of the groom, made a presentation of a suitably inscribed gold headed cane to Mr. Craig, and a gold wrist watch to Mrs. Craig.

After a suitable response from Mr. Craig, short congratulatory addresses were given by members of those present, a toast to the bride, which was ably responded to, bringing to a close a very happy hour.

Mr. and Mrs. Craig, during their lifetime, have been actively connected with church work in all its branches, at the Lodge Room Methodist Church, and latterly with the United Church, Tweed.

Mr. Craig has always taken a keen interest in all public affairs and was for several years a member of the municipal council of Hungerford township. Previously he has been connected for over fifty years with the Orange Order and is also a member of Tweed Lodge A.F. and A.M.

During the afternoon and evening a great number of their friends and acquaintances called to extend congratulations and wishes for many more years of happy wedded life and they were received by Miss Marion Stokes a grand daughter, and during the time each was asked to sign in a register suitably inscribed without and bound with gold.

Telegrams, letters and remembrances from friends, both at home and at a distance, were received during the day, all expressions of the same facilitations.

The Tweed News joins heartily in extending its best wishes.

The decorations in the house were effectively carried out in gold and purple, together with a profusion of beautiful tulips, daffodils and sweet peas of the same color.

An interesting event took place at the close of the morning service in the United Church, on Sunday, March 30, when, in honor of their Golden Wedding which they where entering the following day, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Craig were presented with an address and a beautiful bouquet of flowers by the congregation, and by a second address from the Sunday School (scholars; with registration and return fare to the International Sunday School Convention being held in Toronto in June. The addresses are as follows:

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Craig,

The congregation of this church of which you have for many years been loyal members, rejoice with you on this memorable anniversary, the Gold en Jubilee of your Wedding. It is to them as to you an occasion for gratitude to Almighty God that he has so long spared you to enjoy life together. It must be a source of considerable satisfaction to be able to look back upon fifty years of a life spent together but as when with you Mr. and Mrs. Craig there is the sure and certain knowledge that those years have been well and nobly spent. The joy and satisfaction that you feel in the sunset hours of your life must be very great indeed.

It is the hope and prayer of your friends in this congregation that many happy and useful years still be before you. Within the past year this congregation has offered its congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Barnett on an occasion similar to this. It is not the good fortune of many congregations to number among its members people who have celebrated their golden wedding. We desire to mark this event by presenting to you with this expression of our goodwill, love and respect these flowers which in a real way may express what words fail to say.

Signed on behalf of the congregation of Tweed United Church.

Rev. H. Cooke, Pastor.
S. H. Connor, Secretary.

To Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Craig.

Dear Friends:

There are certain periods in our lives that we may regard as mile stones or way marks at which we pause to consider the past and scan the future. Such an occasion has now occurred with you. Fifty years ago you were given over by mutual admiration, and with the vigor, ambition and hopefulness of youth, you decided to take upon yourselves the vows of fidelity to each other and determined to share the joys and sorrows, agreeably meet the sorrows and difficulties of life, aided by the presence and assistance of Him who said, "They too may be one."

And now on the fiftieth anniversary of that important occasion, we, the members of the Tweed United Church Sunday School, extend to you our heartiest congratulations of the fact that you have through these years endeavored not only to guide your own lives by the teachings of God's word but have sought to teach others that they might be guided by the same rule. Both at Lodgeroom and at Tweed you have taken a practical interest in the Sunday School work and we believe the good seed you have sown will bring forth fruit in changed lives. On behalf of the scholars you have passed we trust you have found that "All things work together for good to them that love God." We hope for you a cloudless evening of life and at the end, a faithful servant's reward.

Tweed, March 31st, 1930.

Mrs. S. O. Way
Mrs. G. S. Conlon.
Lodge Room

To start home life in a place and to continue there for forty years, not only pursuing the tasks incidental to one's occupation but entering into the life of the community as well as the social activities of the community, is to make many friends and to enjoy many rich memories.

This was most fully and delightfully realized by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Craig, when, on Sunday, March 31st 1930, they returned to worship in the old home church and at the close of the service were surprised by being presented with a very fine address and a beautiful bouquet of flowers in view of their Golden Wedding celebration the following day. Mr. R. W. Sullivan read the address, and Mrs. W. J. Montgomery presented the bouquet, while Mrs. S. Jones, representing the W. M. S., added some choice and complimentary remarks.

The address was as follows:

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Craig.

Dear Fellow Workers:

We, the congregation of this church feel that we cannot let this occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of your part of the mostlasered rite given to us by our Heavenly Father, that of marriage without in some small way showing our appreciation of your labors with us in this vine of the Lord. During this half century you have been actively connected with this church and in the erection of this building you did no small part, and which is of much greater value to the community, you have always been interested in all the activities connected with the service here. We all join in the wish that your lives may for many years be an inspiration and help to us and a blessing to ourselves. As a small token of our appreciation of your help and of our esteem of your sterling worth we ask you to accept this bouquet of flowers.

Signed on behalf of the Lodge Room congregation.

STIRLING PLANS BIG RE-UNION

Boys and Girls of Rawdon Village Will be Home Again

(News-Argus)

Residents of Stirling and district of old-timers and former residents of Stirling, who are now living in all parts of the North American continent, will be greatly elated over the announcement that an Old Boys' and Girls' Get-To-Gether will be held in Stirling this year, from June 29th to July 1st. It will be three days of hand-shaking, renewing old acquaintances, re-visiting the old community and boyhood haunts. The event is being staged under the auspices of the Stirling Agricultural Society, in conjunction with a big celebration on July 1st.

Arrangements will be made for a special program on the first day, Sunday, including special music in the churches, which will in all probability be conducted by former ministers. Parades will be held on Monday and Tuesday. A "Dear Old School Days" program will be staged by former pupils and students of the High and Public Schools, who have been swelling this opportunity of a get-ing get-together of boyhood pals and perhaps sweethearts. Programs are being arranged to take up every minute of the three days' celebration. Already arrangements are being made to organize an association of former girls and boys of Stirling in Toronto, and if this is accomplished no doubt many novelties, arranged by the Provincial Capital branch will be included in the program.

A committee has been appointed to secure names and addresses of former residents. A canvass will be made of the districts of Wellman, Mt. Pleasant, Hoards, Carmel, Harold, Stine, West Huntingdon, Madoc Junction, Oak Hills and River Valley for this purpose. Every citizen of Stirling and district is urged to co-operate with the committee in this regard. Names may be left with Mr. C. W. Thompson or Mr. O'Donnell, secretary, Review and Legrow's Store and the News-Argus office. Invitations have been printed and, as the names are handed in or received, will be sent to the former residents. The co-operation of each institution is urgently requested to reply to the secretary at once. This is done, the list of names of those coming home for the Big Get-Together, will be published weekly in the News-Argus, and copies of the paper with details of the three-days' program will be sent to the name on the list. It is hoped that the people of the district will give one hundred per cent. co-operation in this regard.

APRIL SHOWERS AID TO WHEAT FARMERS CLAIM

Signs of Spring Apparent at Melville—Ladies' Aid Met

Melville, April 8 (By Mail)—April showers while more immediately productive of mud than of May flowers are certainly a blessing as far as fall seeded meadows are concerned. Fallsown crops particularly wheat, have fared very badly.

To date the sap yield can scarcely be called plentiful, however the colour and flavour of syrup offered upon the local markets indicates a very superior quality. The price ranges between two and a half and three dollars per gallon.

In spite of the excessive amount of snow during the past winter the roads have been in remarkably good shape. They are noticeably better than they have been for the last two years, which may indicate a much warmer conditions or an unusual amount of activity on the part of the local road overseer.

The birds become more plentiful daily, for weeks the Marmora-raised crows have been sailing overhead in three's and four's and now the real songsters, robins and song sparrows are here in numbers. Their melodies are very welcome after their winter absence. Now that the birds the only wild things to be observed. A snake, a large pike and a caterpillar have been observed within the last few days.

The many friends of Mr. Albert Mor ton are greatly pleased to hear that he is able to be out of doors again after his long and serious illness.

Rev. Peter Chase made a business trip to Latta during the week.

Mr. Ross Cruickshank was in Wellington on business on Wednesday last.

Mrs. George Young has returned to the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Young after paying a visit to her daughter, Mrs. Blanche Boyd of Greenville.

Miss Mae Brooks and Mr. Chas. Brooks are both recovering, the former from a severe cold and the latter from influenza.

On Feb. 3 the Melville Ladies' Aid met at the home of Mrs. Chas. Kunnear. Several hours were spent in quilting, followed by singing responsive roll-call. Mrs. Clarence Garbutt, Mrs. Malcolm French, Mrs. e. Wilkinson and Mrs. J. Chase. The meeting was closed by Mrs. W. H. Anderson.

The Rev Wilkinson, Mrs. Wilkinson, Mr. and Mrs. Garfield French attended the Temperance banquet held in the United Church, Picton, on Friday, April 4th. The speaker of the evening was the Rev. A. E. McCutcheon, of Bloor Street Church, Toronto. The speeches were mighty inspiring.

Mr. G. H. F. Young is not enjoying his usual, remarkably good health. Although Mr. Young is in his eighty-eighth year, his many friends anticipate a speedy recovery.

It is gratifying to learn that Mr. and Mrs. Harry Chase are returning to Melville after several months absence. Mr. Chase has resigned his position with the Rawleigh company and is returning to the farm.

Mr. Clifford Mayhall has made an early start at his spring plowing and finds the land in fairly workable condition.

Miss Neil Kelley has been a recent guest of Mrs. Clarence Garbutt.

Mr. Richard Cook spent the evening of April 3rd with friends at Moore's Mills.

Mr. D. H. Young was in Wellington on April 3rd on business.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

COMING HOME

By

Jasper B. Sinclair

Copyright, 1930, International Feature Service, Inc.

"When you come home from school, Ben, you better wash up the machine. We won't be looking quick and span for tomorrow," directed Mr. Edmunds, as he prepared to leave for town.

"All right, dad. I'll have it shined up great!" promised Johnny. Johnny was fifteen and went to the Union High School in Woodville.

Tomorrow was the big day. It marked the opening of the Woodville County Fair. There would be races, sports, sideshows — everything that goes with a county fair.

It was the event of the year; to the Edmunds' family and to all other families in the county.

So Johnny went whistling to school shortly after his father had left.

That day it showed that a poster was displayed within the hallway of the Union School.

"All boys who are desirous of trying out for the Union High School football team will assemble on the field for practice at 3.30 p.m. this afternoon."

Johnny Edmunds read that notice avidly. In the field of school sports his one desire was to "make" the football team. Other branches of athletics mattered not; the thrill of the gridiron alone appealed.

In the excitement of reading that notice Johnny forgot all about washing the family car, forgot his promise to his father, forgot even the county fair on the morrow.

When the last class adjourned in the afternoon Johnny made his way to the field. Here he stripped and was among the first out on the field.

The coach lectured, drilled the boys in the rudiments of the game and put them through short runs up and down the field.

It was almost dark when Johnny reached home. Turning in the side gate to the Edmunds' house he spied his father standing in the garage door.

Johnny's heart stood still. Suddenly he remembered the car and the promise to have it shined up by the time his father returned.

At the sound of his steps on the graveled walk, Mr. Edmunds swung around. A frown deepened his face.

"Johnny! Why isn't the car washed?"

The boy hung his head. "I forgot, dad!"

"Forgot! A fine excuse. What were you doing all afternoon?"

Johnny tightened his lips. Had he explained that football practice started that afternoon at the school, his schoolfellows might have been considered. Johnny's father was a football enthusiast, and just as eager for his boy to "make" the team as was Johnny himself.

But Johnny refused to speak. A promise is a promise! He was resentful enough not to seek the easiest way out.

His father said nothing more, but strode quietly into the house. After a hasty supper he donned old clothes and went out to the garage. For three hours he worked on the machine, washing and polishing and greasing it. Curtly he refused Johnny's proffered assistance.

In the morning there was tears and excitement in the Edmunds' household. Mrs. Edmunds was busy packing the lunches, Johnny's sisters were cleaning up the breakfast table and making up the beds.

When everything was in readiness the family sought their beds and rested. Johnny came out of his room, cap in hand.

"Just a minute, Johnny," spoke Mr. Edmunds. "I've decided that you better stay at home today. You'll understand why and it'll give you a little time to think things over."

Crestfallen, Johnny eyed his father Then he glanced at his mother. There was a trace of tears in her eyes. His younger sisters fidgeted uncomfortably.

Silently the boy returned to his room. Not allowed to go to the county fair because he had forgotten—

Johnny ruminated was on the verge of tears, when he heard the Edmunds' machine start down the driveway, leaving him alone. It seemed a hard punishment. A difficult way of teaching him a lesson.

Dusk was shrouding the countryside when the Edmunds returned from the fair. Mrs. Edmunds was the first to enter the house.

"Johnny!" she called. "Johnny!" the boy's name echoed silently thru the rooms. "Johnny!" A quavering, distressful note injected itself into her third summons.

It was in his room that she found the note. A brief note scribbled in pencil, and tucked into the m'rror of his bureau.

Johnny's father laughed at first, declaring that the boy would be back as soon as he became hungry. But as the days passed without any sign of Johnny, Mr. Edmunds' reassurances fell on deaf ears. He began to lose faith in his own prophecy.

The days lengthened into weeks, then into months. Still there was no trace of Johnny, nor any word from him.

Eventually the months lengthened into years.

Johnny's sisters had grown up and married, both settling in Woodville, the views of well-to-do farmers.

In their passing the years left their mark on Mr. Edmunds, lining his face with deep furrows that marked his sorrow and regret. The rich brown hair of Mrs. Edmunds was slightly streaked; her eyes dimmed from constant weeping.

Outside of Woodville the world moved onward. The war came to the distant clash of arms and the forward march of civilization was rudely suppressed. A crimson tide overwhelmed Europe and engulfed the United States.

Khaki-clad millions sailed across seas, to distant ports, eager and careless. Laughing, gay-hearted, the Doughboys into the maelstrom. The crimson tide receded—the clash of arms faded into the past.

Khaki-clad millions sailed across the sea back to their home ports, a tribute older and less careless of fate. Behind them lay somber thoughts of countless thousands of white crosses in serried ranks upon the soil of murders and Picardy.

One day there came a long envelope to the Edmunds' home. A bulky envelope, heavy and ominous, bearing the seal of the United States government.

Mr. Edmunds' fingers trembled as he slit it open. Slowly he drew forth the sheet and something that felt fold and heavy.

Mrs. Edmunds hung over his shoulder as he spread the paper on the table. His pitiful lines dimmed and grew faint. As through the mist she read:

"For distinguished gallantry in leading an attack upon an enemy machine gun nest between Vaux-Forest d'Argonne, September 19th, 1918, Sergeant John David Edmunds is posthumously awarded the Distinguished Service Cross."

Mrs. Edmunds' fingers trembled as she picked up the bit of ribbon and pin, bronze cross and held them close to her heart.

"My boy, my boy," she murmured softly, "at least you've come home to me!"

The neighbors wondered at the sudden brightness in Mrs. Edmunds' eyes and the alertness in her step. They marveled at the pride that shone in Mr. Edmunds' face. But they could not understand. Only that old couple, Mr. and Mrs. Edmunds, could understand. Their boy had come home 21 last.

HOG GRADING METHOD USED IN THIS COUNTY

Hogs now Being Settled for on a Graded Basis in Hastings

HOGS MARKED

On the Central as well as on the local markets live stock is sold on the basis of its value as meat. In live stock there are distinct differences in yield, quality, waste, etc., between animals. In buying the buyer keeps these factors in mind and pays accordingly. In the care of cattle this can be done on the basis of individual animals or small groups of animals quite. In the case of hogs, however, the variety of wild animals is so great that the difficulty of handling the units in quality is greatly increased from the standpoint of the individual producer and the packer. It is consequently as the several hogs are used as a means of selling the poorer ones in the load. His special efforts to produce better stock cannot be little if any reward. In order to correct this condition it was necessary to devise some means whereby the quality of the individual hog in a load would be recognized. This was done by classifying each hog according to its weight, yield of high-priced cuts and degree of finish, all of which affect its value. This operation is known as Hog Grading and is done by employees of the Dominion Live Stock Branch at all the Central markets are at most of the Abattoirs in Canada. Trading is still done on the basis of the carload, but settlement is generally made on the basis of the quality of the individual hog.

Unfortunately it is only recently that this basis of trading has been recognized to any extent at country points, though there are points in Ontario where it has been used ever since Hog Grading came into force in 1922. Recently, largely through the efforts of the Dominion Live Stock Branch, this method has been extended to Hastings, Colborne and hogs are now being settled for on a graded basis at this County. To do this one of two methods of grading must be followed at country points.

1. Each farmer's lot of hogs must be marked so that they can be identified and returned made according to the grade given to that lot.

(b) Or, each lot must be graded by the driver as it is loaded at the shipping point.

The obvious weakness of the second method has been overcome by handling to each farmer a statement showing the grade for each lot of hogs he delivered for the load and the official grade given to the lot. This method is the one generally used as it does not complicate grading in any manner, settlement can be made immediately on graded basis and has been found satisfactory.

To simplify grading on a graded basis the following differentials are in force at central points between grades, the difference being made on the Toronto Grade.

The following differentials are in force at the present time in Toronto, but are subject to change without notice:

Grade	Weights	Differential
Select Bacon	190-220	$1.00 per Hog Discount
Bacon	180-230	Basic Price
Butcher	160-190	$0.25 per Hog Discount
Light	Less than 160 and all unfinished hogs	$2.00 per Hog Discount
Heavy	230 up	$2.50 per Hog Discount
Extra Heavy	270 up	$1.50 per cwt Discount
No. 1	160 or 190 trim and finished	Market Price
Sows No. 2	all others	Market Price
Stags		Market Price
Boars		Market Price

Weight is only one factor in determining grade, type and finish are factors of equal importance, and a hog may be placed in a lower grade for being faulty in any one of these respects.

With one of the systems for grading in operation at each point in this County every farmer should be receiving payment according to the quality of his hogs just as he does in the case of cattle.

Some Little Ways to Make the Sick Room Cheery

DR. BISCH GIVES A FEW DON'TS AND DO'S

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

There are those who do not like to go to a hospital when ill and there are those who feel they cannot afford to.

Anyway, especially for minor ailments, physicians often prefer to treat their patients in their own homes.

When illness comes the sick-room becomes an important place. It is important from the standpoint of the patient himself, from the standpoint of the rest of the family as well as from the standpoint of the recovery or arrest of the disease in question.

Always select the very best room for the sick room.

Let it be a room that gets the maximum amount of sunshine. Sunshine cheers the patient and, besides, sunlight is among the very best exterminators of germs.

Let it also be a well-ventilated room. Plenty of fresh air is essential in all types of sickness. Patients who can enjoy fresh air always get well more quickly than those who do not have this decided advantage.

Remove all objects from the room that is likely to be depressing.

Sometimes a piece of furniture can give the blues one lies in bed looking at it most of the time. Sometimes a dingy wall paper or a picture that needs redecorating can keep a person in dull spirits.

Heavy hangings should always be removed. They catch and hold the germs and they are also dust catchers and so spread infection.

A patient who lies in bed all day, whether in pain or no, is also very sensitive to noise. A noisy street, for ifcre, should be avoided wherever possible. Besides, care should be taken to see that doors, ringing of bells, loud voices, etc., within the house disturb the sick one.

Usually it is necessary and desirable to have a small light burning in the sick room all night. But it should not be allowed to shine into the patient's face. An ordinary electric light can be shaded with heavy paper or cloth, or a screen can be used to interrupt a strong light. A lamp, properly shaded, is excellent.

When a person is ill it is best to have a light during the night, even if he does not require care. A certain amount of fear goes with illness, as a rule, and to awaken to the lonely, or otherwise uncomfortable.

As little furniture as is necessary should be the rule to follow. There should never be dusted. It should however, be carefully wiped with a damp cloth each day.

Cut flowers are better than carpet or a large rug. Then can readily be removed from the sickroom and cleaned elsewhere.

It adds greatly to a patient's comfort to shake up the pillows over now and again. Fresh, clean, linen, as well as clean night clothes daily are likewise desirable.

With a little practice and thought it is easy to change the bed linen, sometimes forcing the patient out of bed. First roll him gently to one side and roll the bed linen under him. Place the clean linen on the exposed mattress. Then roll him back to the clean side and remove the soiled linen and then straighten out the clean linen.

Flowers help also to keep a patient cheerful. But only a few should be used and none with a strong odor. Always remove them at night.

Lauten flomler, the distinguished comic of Paris, economists, replying to criticisms of his recent book, "The Rise of Woman," predicted the speedy end of what he calls "the dictatorship of man." Millions of women, he said, were about to invade the labor market of the world, with disastrous economic consequences, tact, finesse, order and regularity. She was about to monopolize all secretarial and much of Government work. The $9,000 a year women had arrived in large numbers and soon industry would be invaded by hosts of $2,500 a year women.

HEAD MASTERS ON CANADIAN TOUR

Principals of Famous English Schools Visit Canada

Saint John, N.B.—"There is at present in Great Britain a decided awakening of interest in the Canadian Universities," said Dr. Cyril Norwood, M.A., headmaster of Harrow School and chairman of the delegation of British Head Masters who arrived in West Saint John recently on the Canadian Pacific liner, "Duchess of Bedford," from Great Britain. The party of eminent British educators came to Canada to study the development of the Dominion and particularly the educational work of the ten Canadian Universities.

They left here shortly after the disembarkation of passengers from the "Duchess of Bedford" to visit Fredricton and the University of New Brunswick. The itinerary of the party then called for them to leave Fredericton, N.B., Monday evening for Halifax, N.S., and leave that city for Levis, Quebec, on Tuesday morning. They will visit Shawinigan Falls, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina Calgary, Vancouver, Victoria and on the return, Edmonton, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Sudbury, Toronto, Niagara Falls, Kingston and Montreal. They will sail from Montreal on Friday, May 9 on the Canadian Pacific liner, "Duchess of Bedford"—When interviewed here following their arrival, Dr. Norwood, said, "The delegation, of which I am chairman, comprises head masters from many of the leading schools of varying types. We have some of us had the pleasure of being in Canada before, and we are looking forward to a most interesting and instructive tour across the continent and back. We are coming with an open mind and are anxious to learn as much as we can about the development of this great dominion and particularly about the life and work of the great Canadian universities." Dr. Norwood continued, "The party will not have time to visit many of the Canadian schools, their interest being primarily in the universities. They will devote their visit to the higher institutes of learning."

The personnel of the party consists of the following, Dr. Norwood, of Harrow School where Byron was taught and later Stanley Baldwin; F. Fletcher, M.A., of Charter House (Founded 1611) School; Wm. Pitt, M.A., of Christ's Hospital, more popularly known as the blue-coated boys established in a cattle from Sir Henry Thornton, C. S. Smith, vice-president in charge of European affairs, C.N.R. BRITAIN TRADES WITHIN EMPIRE

But Canada's Export of Eggs to England Cut in Half

OTTAWA, April 9. (CP)—The percentage of British food imports from Empire countries is increasing in these post war days compared with pre-war times, apparently at the expense of home production. This fact is brought to light by a report recently issued by the British Ministry of Agriculture which shows the proportion of the total supply of food of all kinds consumed by the population that are respectively provided by home production imports from the Empire and imports from foreign countries. The period from 1905 to 1909 is taken as pre war times and 1924-27 as post war days for the comparison.

Summing up the report, Harrison Watson, Canadian Trade Commissioner in London, writes in the current issue of the Commercial Intelligence Journal, as follows:

"The proportion of imports from foreign countries exhibits practically no change. At the same time the percentage of imports from Empire countries has advanced from 17.7 per cent. to 21.6 per cent. This is entirely at the expense of home production, which shows a reduction of from 42.3 per cent. to 39.3 per cent. The Empire production of wheat flour advanced from 15.2 per cent. to 16.3 per cent. and during the period that supplies of flour from foreign countries, fell away from 53.1 per cent. to 41.6 per cent. Another noticeable feature is that foreign countries, and not the Empire have captured all the additional import trade in meat which has resulted from increased consumption and the reduction in home supplies. This is due to the fact that Empire farmers comes from the Argentine and neighboring countries whereas Australia, the chief source of Empire meat, has at present only supply in frozen condition."

CONFIDENCE IN WEST'S FUTURE

Expect Great Things With the Coming of Spring, Says Agent

Winnipeg — A general condition of quiet confidence is apparent in the west coupled with the optimistic expectation that with the coming of spring there will be a marked improvement in all lines of activity, according to D. C. Coleman, Vice President of Western Canada Flour Mills Co., Limited, who returned to Winnipeg recently, after a business trip of about a month's duration in the West. "In southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan snow has been completely covered by the warm weather continuance of which will bring a large number of farmers to work on the land within the next week or ten days," Mr. Coleman has been informed. Seeding had begun at some places, Carscallen and in some parts of the Bassano and Empress districts of southern Alberta. Plowing and harrowing is in progress at Lone Pine, Lethbridge and practical Alberta. On the Pacific coast Mr. Coleman found that high hopes prevailed for a big crop movement of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to the Orient this season, that is, is felt, will accomplish a great deal in developing trade between Canada and the Orient. Another interesting subject of interest is the new Transcontinental line across the country, the coming of which this August is eagerly awaited which both sides of the line speaking of the same. The construction to be undertaken by the Canadian National Railways in Ontario and Saskatchewan this summer, Mr. Coleman said that contracts have already been let for the grade construction of four branch lines, covering nearly 90 miles, and for steel on 50 miles between Olive, M.A. Master of Dauntsey School which specialises in agriculture S. H. Miller, M.A., of Whitgift Grammar School; J. Bell, M.A., of St. Paul's, the old London foundation school; C. D. Turner, M.C.M.W.F. from Marlborough College, a well-known west country school; H. Rutherford, the continuation of the fifth lake branch west from Rock Glen, and the first of the Lacombe-Hardisty western lines with Edmonton and Lacombe as the objective. Edmonton and Calgary and Edmonton route are among the other features of the programme which will provide railway facilities to a large number of farmers in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

STEERING CLEAR OF SUBNORMAL CHILD

Edmonton, Alta., April 9. (CP) — Exclusion of subnormal children from the classrooms of the schools is planned by the public school board of this city. It has been ascertained that in the schools of Edmonton there are 283 children whose intelligence rating is between 50 and 75 and six others whose rating falls below the 50 mark, and the board has decided to exclude from the school children who rate under 50 and instituting additional auxiliary classes, called "opportunity classes", for those intelligence quotient ratings from 50 to 75. The provincial school act provides for exclusion from the schools of children rating under 50.

The local school board in order to provide a remedy to the above effect, has passed a recommendation that the University of Alberta arrange for special training of teachers to carry on the work in the classes for the mentally deficient. In this connection the board expresses the opinion that the Alberta government should erect on the University grounds a school for mentally deficient children and that a director should be appointed to take charge of this line of education.

CHILD PARKING PROBLEM

Edmonton, April 9 By Canadian Press—The city commissioners have taken in the special problem of parking in churches, for mothers leave bring their children to the provincial child clinic. The children, or some of them, are carried in perambulators. There are left in the space between the main door of the block and the street while the youngsters are taken upstairs to the clinic. The suggestion has been offered that the solution lies in installation of automatic traffic signals and policemen to direct parking. But the problem remains and grows.

If you don't then life is trying, do a little tryout yourself.

INSTALMENT AND BUSINESS TODAY

System Is Inherently Strong Says Mr M. P. Tuten

"The instalment system" is the subject of an interview with Mr. M. P. Tuteur, managing director of the Premier Vacuum Cleaner Co., Ltd.

"When an institution has become the butt of comedians and cartoonists, one may be sure that like the proverbial mother-in-law, it has come to stay," so writes Mr. P. W. Quick of London, England, in his "Zoonom'es of Instalment Trading and How Purchase.

So much has been said for and against the instalment system on it's opulent that it is interesting indeed to examine what progress, if any, this system has made in perhaps the most conservative market in the world—I refer to Great Britain. It will certainly come as a shock to the followers of Samuel Smiles and his Thrift School to learn that no less than sixteen million higher purchase agreements are at present in existence in Great Britain; that these are increasing at the rate of four million per year, or nearly eleven thousand a day; and that they cover some 60% of the piano and gramophone retail trade; 50% to 60% of the automobile sales, 70% of business done in securities of all machines, and 80% of the furniture so'd in these Islands.

"Business," a highly conservative British Journal, says of the above that the alarm if any alarm there need be, is based on the fact that all this means an enormous extension of credit—and credit given on security vastly different from the security known to the Samuel Smiles generation.

The crux of instalment trading means that the man in the back street can borrow on no sounder security than the degree'ding value of the goods which he buys, and therefore in the final analysis as to whether an instalment purchase is permissible or not, one must analyse the goods bought, and providing that they do not depreciate before the last instalment payment has been made, then such purchase is admissible.

Mr. Quick discusses the whole theory of this system, and at the end of his book lists the pros and cons of it. His cons constitute in the main warnings to the over-enthusiastic retail'er and is apt to consider too little the reasons contended in giving instalment credit.

The warnings may be summarized as follows:

1. Beware of losses owing to neglect of investigation. It is more difficult to supervise personal credit than business credit.

2. Don't let your anxiety to compete lead you into extending the system to articles that depreciate too rapidly.

3. Don't overload your books with credits for articles already consumed

"If seems," said Mr. Tuteur, that another danger with which we in Canada are faced is in the fight for business in demanding too small a down-payment. In such cases we are being unfair to the purchaser who in many cases is unable to continue the payments, and in the final analysis, we are being unfair to ourselves who are asking for trouble and most certainly getting it.

"As regards our business," Mr. Tuteur continued, "no less than 95% of our retail business is done on the instalment system, and our total loss is actually less than 1% which seems to me proof in itself that the system is inherently sound. Our success in being down this loss we believe is due to demanding a reasonable first deposit and to the fact that we are selling an article whose useful life extends for many years after the last instalment has been paid."

Offset against the dangers mentioned by Mr. Quick are the advantages of the enormously increased production, which the system allows. Masses of people can buy pianos, gramaphones, radios, automobiles and electrical appliances today which otherwise would provide no market for these goods; mass production has therefore become increasingly possible, and the factories producing these goods are enabled to work continuously at a high speed. Employment and therefore consumption increases.

In a word, the instalment system:

1. Stimulates demand, therefore increasing production.

2. Encourages thrift by the systematic budgeting of household expense in order to meet periodical instalments.

3. Protects people by discouraging purchase out of income rather than capital.

4. Promotes hard work in order to bring bigger incomes and be able to take greater advantage of instalment offers.

Further, the instalment system has unquestionably been the means of permitting the citizens of this Dominion to live in greater comfort than the citizens of any other country, save perhaps our neighbors to the south, and it has also given them an opportunity to indulge in some of the finer things of life.

All in all, when weighed in the balance, the instalment system has be yond doubt been a boon to the citizens of Canada, and if in the future it is run in a business-like manner, there is no question but that it will continue to contribute very materially to the building up of a contented and industrial population in it's rapidly expanding Dominion.

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

"Not today, Rosie. I—I don't feel well."

The little Chinese girl's voice held a worried note. "What shall I do?" Miss Parker's out of town. She phoned."

A long moment, then Ardeth's tired voice. "All right. I'll be right down."

What did it matter where she was? What did anything matter?

She mopped her face in cold water. Combed her hair. Moving with slow deliberation, as if she were being knew of their private affairs. Startled at more than a little resentment.

So now Ah Ling knew the reason for Ardeth's white face and listless manner. Ah Ling was distressed. She was fond of Ardeth and adored Cecile.

She slipped on to a nearby restaurant and came back with a pot of tea and some toasted muffins. Ah Ling put it down on the table where she said softly, "Eat this. My father always says that tea will never grief on an empty stomach."

The girl was worn away like a long nightmare. This was one of the big storms of the year, few came into the shop and the Smokerie had no patrons.

At four-thirty Ardeth went to the back room and took down her wraps.

"Take care of the shop, Ah Ling and lock up at six, will you? I—I'm going home."

Out in the growing dusk, Bending her umbrella against the driving rain. Feeling the cold shakings of rain on her legs as she battled her way up the hill.

She had reached a neighborhood of grey wood'n houses standing cold and aloof at the top of their long bleak flights of steps. Some of them had unkept lawns and sodden trees. Fly speckled Rooms-to-Let signs were pronped in the windows.

Here was the realm of shabbiness and decay. Yet in the nineties this had been a prosperous area a stylish neighborhood. Up th's street. Wealth had driven in landau and Victoria. Belles in leg-of-mution sleeves and gored skirts had swept up those wood nedstod by gallants in Prince Albert coats and satin cravats.

In the middle of the block was a church, in'ependently dreary in the rainy twilight.

Ardeth, wept slowly up the shallow wooden steps into the chapel. Tiptoeing down the shadowy nave to a pew, halfway down its length, where a great pillar formed a shelter. She slipped in here, her heart shaking her with its violent pumping.

The church was apparently empty, but the door leading into the vestry was ajar, Voices of the wife-in-waits of the minister. The altar was softly lit by candles, as though in readiness.

Still. So still in here that a sort of tired peace stole over her. She pulled off her hat, rested her hot face against the pillar and closed her eyes.

She was startled to painful wakefulness at the sound of a car stopping outside. Carriage wheels ran up the steps voices echoing in the entrance.

Ardeth's face went white and her eyes were dark with dread. She slipped to her knees, crouching against the pillar.

She recognized Cecile's father and mother. A friend of Cecile's—Vivian Aldrich, who came sometimes to the Smokerie. A man she had never seen before.

Ardeth's sick eyes went over Cecile beautiful, benevolent, despite the stormy cloud.

The minister came out of the vestry door. Ardeth was dimly aware that he was speaking to Mr. Parker, even as she was dimly aware of Cecile whisper ing to her mother. But her anguished gaze was on Ken now, devouring him, her heart in her eyes. Staring until the candles at the altar became a golden blur.

Too far off see Ken's face, but the tall young figure held a weary stoop which made Ardeth yearn toward him. A dream a terrible dream. Forming rebellion in her heart, touching her breast to madness. A pulse had begun to pound in her throat. Her temples throbbed.

West Wheat Acreage to Remain Unchanged

ACREAGE IN WHEAT UNCHANGED

Canadian Press Gathers Comments on the Western Situation

MOISTURE — RESERVES

Manitoba and Northern Alberta Are the Most Advanced

(Canadian Press)

Winnipeg, April 10.—Spring rains across the prairies are the most urgent need of western wheat farmer. Early official comment, gathered by the Canadian Press, indicates that the wheat acreage will be about the same as last year. Accurate estimates, however, are mentioned as difficult in view of the fact that seeding is not yet general. Manitoba and Eastern Saskatchewan are mentioned as profiting to the greatest extent from sub-normal rains of last fall, though all sections stress necessity of plentiful moisture during the spring season. In every section, moisture reserves are stated to be lower than usual, in some cases, however, the sub-soil is sufficiently moist to carry on for a time.

By the time seeding is underway generally, the season is expected to strike about the average starting time, if not a few days early. Though scattered reports of sowing have been received from virtually all parts of the West, Southern Manitoba and Northern Alberta are probably most advanced at the present time.

WILL THESE GIANTS CLASH AT THE EMPIRE GAMES?

A report has just been given to the Canadian Press that Bob Pearce (bottom, left), Australia's premier sculler, and holder of the Olympic title, will come to Canada this summer to take part in the British Empire Games. (Right) is Jack Guest, holder of the Canadian sculling championship, which he won from Joe Wright, Jr., (top,left) last year. Both of these young giants are training hard for the Big-ish Regatta, when they will again try to lift the coveted Diamond Sculls for Canada, and already rowing experts are speculating as to whether Guest or Wright will represent the Dominion at the forthcoming Games. Guest has on-stroked a style which, critics claim, will be the rule of the next generation of oarsmen, while Joe Wright, is called a "throwback."

RIVER IS BLOCKED WITH ICE

Lowlands Near Poplar Point Threatened By the Floods

TWENTY FEET HIGH

Flood Tide of River Is Feared By Agriculturists Along Basin

(Canadian Press)

Winnipeg, April 10—Tolling Central Manitoba farmers strove today to blast aside the towering ice jam in the Assiniboine River which threatens to flood the lowlands near Poplar Point. Abandoned at darkness last night, dynamiting efforts proved unable to dislodge the mass of ice-cakes crowded twenty feet high in a sharp curve in the river. Today, with the water seeping continually higher dynamite was still being applied to the blockage in the hope that the river might run free before the flood tide is reached.

Canine is Cause of Agitation in Council Chamber

Windsor, April 10. — One collie dog caused much agitation in the East Windsor City Council. Eugene Lamarr, official dog-catcher, and David Turpin, original owner of the dog, figured in the playlet.

Lamarr caught a dog owned by the Windsor man in Walkerville and turned it to a resident of Riverside. Words waxed warm in the council as Turpin demanded his dog.

Finally the finance committee took charge of the case; the members decided to pay it to the extent of $3.50 to reimburse the Riverside man, and Turpin got his dog, plus a nice new collar.

Madoc Man Penalized for His Misdemeanors

Andrew Alexander May Go to Jail For Three Months

Penalties to Andrew Alexander of Madoc for disobedience to the law will deprive him of at least one month and possibly three months' freedom. These sentences being handed down by Magistrate Casement today in Belleville Police Court. Alexander was charged with the dig on April 7th drive a motor car while intoxicated, assault Provincial Constable Fred Hill while that officer was carrying the duty and also intoxication, it being the second offence. Two of the charges were by summary trial and the assault an indictable offence. He elected summary trial on this count and to all charges he pleaded guilty. For driving the car while intoxicated he was given ten days and cost amounting to $71.80 and in default an extra 10 days.

For his second offence of intoxication he was given a fine of $50.00 and $71.00 costs or in default one month. On the major count he was sentenced to the County Jail for one month and fined $50.00 and $71.00 costs and in default a further two months. All sentences will run concurrent and if none of the fines are paid Alexander will serve three months in the jail.

It is understood that Alexander drove into Madoc on Monday night in a very intoxicated condition and left his car to enter a cafe. When he returned for the car Provincial Constable Hill attempted to arrest him and he put up an argument and the officer received some nasty scratches on the face. He was finally subdued and brought to Belleville. Alexander's argument in passing sentence said that it is a serious matter to interfere with officers carrying out his duty and that officers have a difficult job to perform and should be protected. "As for the charge of driving while intoxicated I am of the opinion that every person found guilty of the offence should serve a term in jail," said Magistrate Casement.

Daytona Beach, Fla., April 10.—Minor motor trouble today put an end to the attempt of Kaye Don, British racer, to establish a new world's automobile speed record. He made four runs over the course at the top speed of 182 miles an hour and then towed his giant machine to the garage with the announcement that he would renew his attempts tomorrow.

BLAME DOG FOR DEATH OF CHILD

General Belief That Child Was Carried By Large Dog

FRIGHT PROVED FATAL

Buffalo Authorities Seek Clues In Discovery of Body

(Canadian Press)

Buffalo, April 10. — Mystery today surrounded the death of four year old Phyllis Gottschalk whose naked, bruised and torn body was found in a field near her home. The tan stockings and little grey shoes, still clean, were all the clothing left on her body. The rest of the clothing was being blown in shreds about the field by the wind. Police believe the child was attacked and torn by a large dog. The dog, they think, carried her to the field. Medical examination led to belief that the child died of fright.

DOG POISONERS AT WORK ON WEST HILL

Residents on the West Hill are up in arms over the deliberate poisoning of dogs that have become family and neighborhood pets. The cookerel spaniel owned by Mr. Fred Barlow has died within the past week and Mr. Barlow's brother-in-law, Dr. Morgan is now suffering from poisoning and grave suspicion that he probably recover. Other residents have brought the matter to the attention of the Ontario Intelligencer stating they have lost their pets in the same way. All of these dogs have had their tar paid on the road and were perfectly harmless seldom leaving their homes. The matter has been reported to the police and a close investigation has been made and the guilty parties apprehended will be hauled into court.

Income Tax Staff is Preparing for Influx

April 30th Marks Final Day For District Returns

Income tax statements have not as yet started to pour into the local bureau at this territory, in charge of the Dominion Income Tax Bureau at Belleville stated to the Ontario Intelligencer today. It is still a little early to expect them to come in, although they dribble in, in small quantities. The statistical returns, however, are all in March 31st being the last day in which they might be received. Checking work on them is now going on.

April 30th is the final day now which citizens of Belleville and four surrounding counties, as well as corporations may make returns. The April 30th "the Mounties" are due to arrive from Ottawa to protect the offices and it is from this date that the real rush sets in. For the last five days at least thousands upon thousands of statements will be received.

Four counties must and their returns into Belleville, Peterboro, Hastings, Durham and Northumberland and Prince Edward counties all file in the local office. This is what might be called a good sized territory.

When queried as to the proportion of citizens and corporations that make mistakes in their statements Mr. McGrory confessed that he could not give any reliable figures. "That," he said, "would be rather hard to estimate. Of course, people now are each year finding it easier to make out their returns as they become experienced. Then, too, the statements are not quite so complicated as they were a few years ago. However, the average citizen will probably agree that it is hard work enough to fill out the forms and rather dread the task each year.

Draft 5 Power Naval Accord

(Canadian Press)

London, April 10. — Naval conference experts were understood to have been put to work today drafting a five power agreement which bolds Foreign Ministers, Briand of France and Grandi of Italy, have tentatively agreed to sign.

London, April 10.—Complete agreement was reached between Great Britain, Japan and the United States at the Nabal Conference today and the way is now clear for a three power pact. Decks were cleared today by settling the still outstanding but minor point concerning definition for use in connection with training ships. The last vestiges of hope for the five power agreement were said not to have been abandoned, but it should be known by tonight whether such a treaty is possible or whether British, Japanese and United States delegates shall go ahead with the three power pact.

POSSE SCOURING COUNTRYSIDE FOR MISSING FARMER

Aged Richmond Township Man Disappears — Missing Since Monday

KINGSTON, April 10.—Three hundred men of Richmond Township are searching through bush and swamp lands today for Zeph Dean, 74, one of the district's leading farmers. He has been missing since Monday morning.

Dean left his home to walk to a sap bush owned by Garfield Stills a short distance away. He met and spoke to Robert Moore, another neighbor, as he walked along the road and a few minutes later was seen turning into a path through the bush. Since then no trace of him has been found.

A few neighbors were called to help in the search for Dean when he was missed on Monday night and the hunt was continued by immediate friends Tuesday. Yesterday morning, as word of his disappearance spread over the countryside, the huge posse was formed Provincial police from the Napanee post are directing the hunt.

The aged man was wearing a black raincoat and rubber boots over overalls when he left his home. Step-by-step scrutiny over all paths through the bush has yielded no sign of him.

Waited 40 Years for Honeymoon

CHICAGO, April 7.—A bride's honeymoon, postponed, packed but unused for forty years because the bridegroom could not find time to go, will be put immediately to the use for which it was originally intended on order of the court.

Before Judge Joseph Sabath, Mr. and Mrs. William Enselh, 68 and 63 years old, were back today to settle their differences over temporary alimony.

"I had my suitcase packed and it is still packed, but Pa wouldn't go," Mrs. Enselh told Judge Sabath. "He said he didn't have time to go."

The embarrassed Mr. Enselh admitted the truth of his wife's statements. Judge Sabath ordered them to take a belated honeymoon at Hot Springs, Ark., beginning to-morrow.

LIVE O'ER DAYS OF VIMY RIDGE AT VIMY MIGHT

Sentiment and Recollection of War Days On Duck Boards

BILLETS WERE RECALLED

Vimy Ridge, That Battle in Which Canada Won Nationhood

The humor of the trenches, the fun in billets and the fine comradeship which was built up during the dark days of the Great War all brought the comback last night when the non-commissioned officers, the greater majority having seen service overseas held a Vimy night in the sergeant's mess at the armouries. Col. Eric Keeler, M.C., officer commanding the Argyll Light Infantry, was an invited guest and for one night the N.C.O. rubbed shoulders with the "O.C." and everybody was happy. Behind the laughter and the songs which were sung was a thing of sadness for there were many missed around the festive board. These comrades had "gone west" during the battles to engrave into the hearts of the nations, their sacrifice and loyalty. They were not forgotten as a silent toast was drunk to their immortal memory and several times the name of a well known pal would be broached. Vimy Ridge and the sacrifices which many experienced on the battleground were vividly brought back and all the workers were convinced that Canada had her place as a nation on the field.

There were but sixty N.C.O.'s in attendance and as one speaker put it there should have been at least three hundred from this district. "The spirit is appalling and the sooner the boys get together for mutual protection and to advance ideas which came out of the war the better will be the comback" of returned men was a remark made by a sergeant.

The rations were not forgotten as the old saying went, "the army moves on its stomach." If the troops were fed, work would certainly be done. Over the rat-ons the boys poured forth their little diffi-ulties in the dug outs knee-deep in France and in the billets behind the lines. All were sung with gusto led by Fred Rawson at the piano. Entertainment in the way of songs and stories were given by different members of the mess and a little sketch, "The Silent Guardsman" was a scream. Solos by Billy Edwards, a duet by the Crawford brothers, solos by C. S. H. Ritchens, Sergt. Gibbs, Everett Smith, Dave Bradford and a quartette by the Aleo-wel Quartette were among the numbers given, each one being heartily encored. The toast to the king was heartily sung and Sergt. Major Bradford proposed the toast to the Argyll Light Infantry which was responded to by Col. Eric Keeler, the commanding officer. The toast to the visitors was proposed by Sergt. Major Gibbs and responded to by Sergt. Dave Gill. The veterans of '66 were not forgotten and Sergt. William Aris responded for the Permian Field veterans. During the speaking Pipe Major Albert Johnston gave several selections on the pipes and the boys cheered the "good old bond." It was an evening of real enjoyment and the boys departed for their several homes in the early hours feeling one more good night to the memory of other days.

YOUTH COMMITS SUICIDE AFTER HOUSE QUARREL

Seized High Tension Wire and Was Killed Instantly

NEW LISKEARD, April 10—Eighteen year old Russell Penman, who left a party at two o'clock yesterday morning after some words with a girl friend, and whose dead body was found about 11 hours later between the transformers and the power sub-station here, killed himself by grasping a high-tension wire "at a moment of mental aberration," according to the coroner's jury, which yesterday afternoon investigated the tragedy.

The evidence indicated that Penman apparently had climbed over the nine-foot wire fence which protects the transformers and had taken an 11,000-volt wire in his hand. He had been dead for hours when Stanley Mallett, an employee of the Canada Northern Power Corporation, noticed him close to the building.

At the inquest held by Coroner Dr. J. S. McCullough, it was stated by Miss Meta Radley that Penman had been with her at a party and that "he was mad at her," leaving alone with a curt "good-bye" to the girl.

PRISONER FACES SERIOUS COUNT

Fifty Year Old Hollander Indicted on Murder Count

WALLACEBURG, April 10—Unaware that the murder victim's body has been found after almost three months' search Francis Vandervelde, 50-year-old Hollander, lies seven in Chatham jail.

His three-months' sentence for theft of a watch expires on May 7, and he has expected to be free on that day. Instead, when cell doors open, it will be to take him to court to face a murder charge, crown officials say.

Joe Kamoen, 62 years old, and for 26 years a leading resident of the Dutch-Belgian farmers' colony in this district, was found yesterday. His body horribly decomposed, was found lying under a manure heap behind his barn three miles from this town. The skull was battered flat.

Kamoen disappeared on December 22 when he left card game at a friend's home. Since the latter part of January, when police were first told of the mystery, the search for his body has been continued.

With its discovery, the crown has established the corpus delecti necessary to the prosecution of a murder-charge against Francois Vandervelde, suspected of the murder since he was found living on Kamoen's farm.

Talks of Value of Crane's Book

The Ontario Intelligencer was told by a Belleville bibliophile that he bought the price priced copy of the Ontario library on the two volumes of Stephen Crane's work "The Red Badge of Courage" namely $3,700 each was much too large according to a December list which a Chicago agency sent out.

An early work of Crane's "Maggie, a Girl of the Streets" was issued under a pseudonym but was later admitted by Crane. This has a price of three hundred dollars quot it in the Chicago list of December last.

"So many, Crane is but a name but he was born in the United States in the year 1871 and died at the age of 28 from tuberculosis. He wrote the "Red Badge of Courage in his early twenties and in it he described the horrors and life of soldiery in the American Civi War though he had never seen warfare. So powerful was the presentation that he became official correspondent in several Cuban campaigns. He was on a ship which was wrecked at sea as he was on his way to "cover" St. Helena for a London paper. From the effects of this his health was undermined and he died before this 30th year. He wrote the which Arnold Bennett practically calls the greatest short story ever written. Crane had an uncanny knowledge of language and power to wield it. He was the first of the American realists. He also wrote free verse.

If "The Red Badge of Courage" is worth what the Ottawa library believes it to be worth, the price must have gone up recently. There is however, always a great difference between price as in various parts of the country and between price asked and paid.

FRUIT COMPANY'S LOSS ON STOCK

Building Was Amply Protected But Fruit Not Wholly Insured

In yesterday's report of the fire in the warehouses of the Belleville Fruit Company it was stated that the insurance of forty thousand dollars covered the loss. The facts are that the $4,000 insurance on the building and $10,000 covered the damage thereon but the insurance on stock amounted to only $2,000 which was much less than the loss. The Belleville Fruit Company therefore sustained quite heavy loss on the fruit contents beyond the insurance protection carried.

An error was made in reporting the manner of the escape of the book-keeper Miss Fitzgerald. It was stated that she left by the window but in reality she made her egress by the door to dress on to immediate duty. Mr. Frank Domenico told The Ontario Intelligencer.

U.S. Senate approved $15,000,000 fund for prohibition next year.

TRENTON AND DISTRICT

Anniversary of Vimy Marked by War Veterans

Rev. Nicol of Trenton Presbyterian Church Is Chief Speaker

(Special by Staff Reporter)

TRENTON, Ont., April 10.—"Vimy Night", the anniversary of that famous victory by Canadian troops in April of 1917, was fittingly celebrated last night here, when over fifty comrades of the Canadian Legion gathered in the Armouries, and heard a short talk on the famous battle by Comrade Reverend Nicol, who along with thousands of other Canadians was present on that memorable occasion thirteen years ago.

Comrade Nicol declared that it was only fitting and right to commemorate the battle of Vimy Ridge, which surpassed all the other heroic achievements of the Canadian Army in France. Vimy Ridge was taken from the Germans by the French in 1915, and the British then relieved them. Under great stress, the latter were forced to retire early in 1916 until they held only the edge of the plateau. This was the situation when the Canadians were transferred from the Somme front to Vimy in 1917. The enemy commanded the ridge itself, and overlooked what became known as "Death Valley", through which the Canadians had to make their way before gaining the heights beyond.

While on the Somme front, the Canadians had heard that the Vimy front was perhaps the quietest in the whole sector, that "special pixetks were necessary to keep the newsboys from selling their papers to the British officers," and that all in all, it would be entirely unlike the Somme trenches the Canucks were anxious to get there. As the speaker declared, it may have been quiet before they got there, but once there, things changed.

Review of Battle

Right from Christmas time to Easter, every man in the Canadian Army was busy preparing for this great battle. On April the 8th Easter Sunday, which was a beautiful Easter day, the troops made their way into the long tunnels which the engineers had made, and then spent the few remaining hours before "zero hour" in writing letters home, reading, or quietly sitting meditating on what the morrow would bring. The speaker, an Army Chaplain, told of visiting various tunnels and conversing with the men in those last few hours. One hour before dawn, the men took their places at the jumping off lines, and at dawn, the battle which will go down as one of the most glorious in Canada's history started.

All day Monday and all day Tuesday the fight raged, and early Wednesday morning the Canadians took the hill and entrenched themselves, holding off successfully the counter-attacks launched by the enemy, and the battle of Vimy Ridge was over.

"As loyal Canadians, we are only doing what is fitting and right in honouring the soldiers who died, as well as those who even now are still in the hospitals suffering from wounds and the effects of their life overseas. In my opinion, no man who served at the front during the war, is enjoying as good health as he otherwise would have had he stayed at home." declared Padre Nicol. "Many who are here tonight, although they may not show it, are still feeling the effects of their months of living as a soldier."

To Move Flag-Pole

Prior to the address by Rev. Nicol, some routine business was disposed of. Comrade Charles H. Harrison, president of the Trenton Branch of the Canadian Legion occupied the chair.

A letter from Mr. W. E. Tummon, M.P., for South Hastings, was read which stated that a special committee has been appointed by the Federal government to deal with several amendments to the Soldiers' Pensions Act. This was received and filed.

A committee of one, consisting of Comrade Ernest Abney was appointed to meet with the Trenton Parks Board to deal with the question of moving the flagpole in the Governor Simcoe Park. At present the tree in the immediate vicinity are higher than the pole, and the flag cannot be seen because of this fact. This matter will be rectified in the near future, it is expected.

A communication was read from the Town Council to the effect that the road leading to Governor Simcoe Park would be fixed in the near future, as soon as work is started on the repairing of roads and streets in Trenton.

Following the business part of the meeting, refreshments and hot dogs were served by the committee in charge, which were much enjoyed by all. The Trenton Band, under the capable leadership of Bandmaster George Woods, was also present, and several selections, as well as community singing were heard.

NO SCARCITY OF MUSKRATS HERE

Frank Sherbert, Trenton School Teacher, Ran Over Animal

TRENTON, Ont., April 10.—Special —This town seems to be infested with muskrats. As already related, when a policeman's finger the other night, another was killed by boys on the main street of the town, and as its pelt was undamaged, it was sold at the market. Now, but the latest is of a Trenton motorist, Mr. Frank Sherbert, assistant principal at the Dufferin Street School running over one with his car.

Mr. Sherbert was proceeding down Macallan Avenue, the other evening when the animal darted out into the street. It was apparently struck on the head, for there was not a mark on its body, but it was picked up dead. Mr. Sherbert presented it to Mr. Pallman, principal of the Dufferin School who sent it to Mr. Brett at Bass Lake Mr. Brett being a high-class trader in mink. When the muskrat is stuffed, it will be placed in the Dufferin School museum.

R. J. Clergue, former official of the Superior Power Corporation and other Sault enterprises, died at Waterbury, Conn.

Fine Prospects for Soft Ball

Trenton League Will Again Operate — Auditors Named

TRENTON, Ont., April 10.—(Special by Staff Reporter)—Although only a small number turned out for the Soft Ball meeting which was held in the Police Court rooms here last night, those present were most enthusiastic over soft ball prospects in Trenton for 1930 and a good league is promised. The election of officers was put off until the next meeting, which will be on Wednesday night, April 16, at the same place, and the same hour, namely eight o'clock.

Mr. Harry Smith, president of the Trenton Town League last year, acted as chairman and gave a short review of tile League's working last year. He stated that this year the League had approximately eighty dollars to start off on, due principally to a dance which was arranged and held some time ago. The only business transacted was the appointment of auditors. Howard Jarrett and W. White as auditors of the 1929 books.

Last year there were ten teams in the league, which was affiliated with the Ontario Softball Association. Trenton's winning team which was the team the C. P. R. team, played off with seven all out of town teams and were finally eliminated by Kingston. If they do as well again this year their supporters will be well satisfied. The annual meeting of the Ontario Softball Association will be held at Kingston on Good Friday, and two delegates from Trenton will be appointed at the meeting on that Wednesday night. A good turnout of all fans is expected.

Fashionably Speaking

By Lucille

Dear Readers:

Aren't the spring suit fashions delightful? And the nicest part of them is that they are so varied. If you want be trimly tailored, you may purchase the ever popular dark pin stripe suit, with which is so well adapted for business and which is always in such good taste. Although this mode has been popular for the past few years, it is every bit as good this year as when it first made its appearance, so if your fancy runs to the tailleur by all means, gratify it. Or perhaps, your taste has changed with the modern trend and you prefer a more feminine version of the suit. If it has, lose no time in visiting the dealers and buying one of these delightful little three piece affairs. They can be had in almost any shade you wish, and how useful they are. The little satin blouse can be worn either tucked in or out, with the suit or without. The skirt can be used in the same manner and if your summer dresses are white or in a shade to match your jacket the last mentioned article will be found to be extremely adeb on cool summer evenings. Really, when you stop to look at them an economical standpoint, the three piece suit cannot be improved upon. It saves you money, it has many varied uses in that it is as table for a most any day occasion, and what is most important, it heads the list in the parade of Easter fashions.

The suits can be bought in many attractive materials, from sporty tweeds to fine crepe-backs. The skirts are either flared or pleated and are finished either with yokes or belts so they can be worn outside the blouse. Another clever little blouses come in many pastel shades, with white leading, and are made up in crepe de chine, satin, flat crepe and doubled faced interest in georgette types expected to be greater with the arrival of warmer weather. The blouses are in most cases sleeveless and their dainty charm is enhanced by frills and jabots. This may solve your Easter outfit problem, dear reader, so give it serious thought.

Fashionably yours,

LUCILLE.

CANADIAN FLAG DISCUSSED BY WOMEN COUNCIL

Canadian Legion Desire No Change in Canada's Flag

EDMONTON, Alta., April 10,— (By The Canadian Press)— Strongly divided opinion on the question of a Canadian flag was voiced when discussion on the resolution brought in by Canadian Daughters' League for a distinctive Canadian flag embodying the Union Jack, was before the meeting of the local council.

Mrs. H. B. Spratt representing the Daughters of the Empire, spoke strongly against a Canadian flag which she felt would create feeling and separate Canada's many nationalities. The Canadian Legion, she pointed out, desire no change, and surely their opinion should come first. Mrs. George Lathem representing the Canadian Labor women, stated that anyone opposing this move was opposing a movement of progress. Mrs. W. J. Ross, president elect of the local council, pointed out "that we have the moral wrongs which has done duty in the past."

Mrs. E. L. Hill spoke briefly, pointed out that Australia, which was more British than Britain itself, had its own flag as New Zealand and the Irish Free State. A vote on the question will be taken at the annual meeting this month.

"The married women working outside the home is a condition that has come to say," Mrs. Margaret Lewis of the Alberta Government labor bureau and factories act inspector stated in the course of an address at the close of the business session, in which she dealt with the protective industrial legislation for women and girls.

"We find as time goes on it is more necessary for the women in the home to help supplement the family income," Mrs. Lewis also felt that no bar should be put on women's economic freedom and all women are to be kept out of industry and the professions because of marriage it raises an objection to young people marrying, as it is a menace to the nationhood of the country.

She also urged amendments of the minimum wage act Mrs. Lewis stated, girls in hotels and cafes were on an eight hour shift now and something should be done in working satisfactorily it should be possible to have the same conditions for girls working in private homes. They are the only ones who at present do not come under the provisions of the act which like all other industrial legislation is made to empower the state to protect the health of its people.

POEM

THE SUN

Sun is an Artist,
When he gets him up;
Sun is an Artist
When he goes to sup;
But sun is no Artist
When he rides high;
He is an Autocrat,
Bombing earth and sky.

When he is an Artist,
He purples the hill,
And sprinkles gold-dust
On the brown mill;
He makes each grass-blade
A lance of gold,
And splotches the sky
In masses bold.

But when he is an Anarchist
He strips the earth bare,
And shows in its nakedness
Whatever is there.

Istanbul, Turkey, April 10. — Once royal dispenser of terror and mystery to the mystery-loving world, Istanbul is now selling the last of her secrets. Tomorrow, by order of the Turkish Republic, the doors of the mystic Imperial Chamber, I.O.D.E., will hold at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, on the evening of May 7th.

The oldest woman journalist in Canada, Mrs. Kate I. Maxaish of Lachute, Que., spent her seventy-sixth birthday with friends in Ottawa. Fifty-one years ago, in collaboration with her husband, the late C. W. Masaish, she reported for the United States press the proceedings in the House of Commons in connection with the gallantry policy of Sir John A. Macdonald. A long and varied experience has given her a broad perspective on the problems that confront the beloved country of her adoption, Canada.

The courtesy of the then Speaker of the House of Commons, the Rt. Hon. Sir Alexander Campbell, Knight of Levis, 1879, gave her the privilege of reporting from his gallery, and during the intervening years, this privilege has been extended to her, this year, she has through the courtesy of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, again enjoyed listening to the debates from the hallowed vantage of the reserved gallery.

LONDON—Mrs. Newman, wife of a Norfolk railway signalman, is a great saver of pennies. Recently her husband gave a bonus. She agreed. "We'll buy it," remarked Mrs. Newman. When the purchase was made what she'd use for money, she displayed her collection of pennies. She had more than enough to pay for the house—had accumulated in 17 years.

MISS LLOYD GEORGE'S DEBUT IN COMMONS

LONDON, April 8—Megan Lloyd George made her first speech in the House of Commons last evening before a large gallery. Members came to listen to the Liberal Leader's young daughter make her formal debut.

She seemed somewhat embarrassed at first and spoke almost inaudibly ,but soon regained her poise and delivered her speech clearly and lucidly. She spoke in favor of a slum district clearance bill which she characterized as a bold measure against bad housing conditions.

Miss Lloyd George, following the custom of most women members of the House of Commons was dressed in a modest black frock for the occasion. She is the only woman Liberal member of the Commons.

The snake, is but a big human hand. Today, the natural action of a child is to die with its hands. It has to be taught the use of a spade.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

DEAR GIRLS: MESSAGE MAN:

I am a young man seventeen years of age, and I "chum" with a boy a year older than I. His parents are going to have a small wedding anniversary celebration—just a few invitating relatives. There are no formal invitations, but I know that I am going to be inviting to entertain the guests, as I play the piano quite well. I go to his home quite often and his parents are very nice to me. I have also met some of his cousins and they have been very nice also. Do you think I should be the only invitations will be given?

2. If I go do you think I take a gift?

READER.

Since you know the family so well, and since you are to be invited not only as a guest but also as you say, as an entertainer, I see no reason why you should not accept the invitation, if you wish to. Surely they need not invite you, if they do not wish to have you come. And apparently they are very fond of you and consider you as "one of the family."

Also since you have it in your power to give them pleasure, you would be a very kind thing for you to do. You're fortunate indeed to have such a gift, so give it to the world for its pleasure, too.

2. I suggest that you send a lovely vase of flowers to the hostess, to arrive in the middle of the party.....

(Mrs. Beecliman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.)

GOING INTO STRIPES

Sentenced to stripes by the latest judgment of style dictators. That we are ready victims of far-flung plot in this matter is seen by the appearance of stripes in silks and woolens and in both sports and evening costumes. Striped flannels have already done a big business this season and have been most effective when combined with plain pastel flannels for men's suits. Striped silk shirtings have also done fashionable time under many labels. Most striking of all, however, has been the appearance of striped cloth for evening wear. Usually the stripes are broad and definite and are used to accentuate the curved lines of the molded silhouette. In many cases the floral patterns are scattered over the striped ground, achieving a blurred and exotic effect that is altogether lovely.

Here it is a two-piece sports frock that has chalked stripes most strikingly in black and white. The jacket is short, which is a material sponsored just now with quite as much enthusiasm as the color scheme itself. Here are the ubiquitous cap sleeves, the jaunty pockets, and a pleated flounce that provides the skirt with comfortable width. A crisp note is introduced at the surplice neckline by a tailored collar of white piqué. The dress is one promisitve enjoyment both to the spectator and the active sportswoman.

"Custom is reason fast asleep; it takes the place of thought in all the popular habits of life."

THE BEAUTY BOX

By HELEN FOLLETT

When the average woman powders her face she starts on her nose. It gets the first full slap of the powder pad, which makes a heavy deposit. All wrong, Mary Ann, all wrong. The make-up artist begins powdering under the chin and works up gradually to the forehead. She uses a fine camel's wool pad and fluffs on the powder, which isn't touched in. The surplus is removed with a soft brush. Dry rouge is put on top of the rouge, forming a cosmetic sandwich.

Facial surgeons in Paris, who take tucks in ladies' faces to wipe out wrinkled areas, reap a harvest from American women. The travelers can hardly be recognized on their return the next door neighbor at home being any the wiser. Some operations are successful, some are not, according to the condition of the skin and the skill of the doctor who makes the incisions and takes the cute little stitches.

Stockings that exert too short produce ingrowing toe nails. Wool stockings which shrink in the wash, are especially responsible for toe-tortures. It isn't that the hail grows in, it is that the cuticle and the skin is pushed toward the nail, forming a heavy thick skin that becomes painful, as a corn is painful. Few women wear stockings large enough for the comfort of their little dogs.

It isn't vanity that makes a sensible woman desire to look her best but self-respect, to which we need to tell the body these days. A good appearance helps to make you feel better, and you do no matter what it may be—doing up the children, a shop or service, talking to partner in the Firm of Matrimony. When a woman doesn't care how she looks, she doesn't care about anything.

There are four causes of obesity—certain diseases, over-eating, eating the wrong food or not getting enough exercise. Disease is no small a factor. It can be mastered. The other causes are one's own doings. Inherited flesh is the hardest of fight to trim down, but it can be done.

Tanlac has put me on my feet again, and feeling fine and I don't believe it has an equal."

FEATHERWEIGHT CROWN WITH ROY HACKETT LOSES

Decision Unpopular As Hackett Outpointed In Slow Bout

THE DECISION WAS BOODED

MONTREAL, April 10 —The feather-weight boxing championship of Canada remains with Leo "Hat" Roy, who was awarded the decision over Sammy Hackett of Toronto, at the end of ten rounds of uninteresting fighting here last night. The decision was booed by the crowd that had packed the large arena by the time the main bout was scheduled. Hackett dazed Roy in the first moments of the fight with a solid right to the chin and knocked him down a moment later. It took the champion three rounds to recover from the dizziness of that mad few moments at the start. The crowd cheered Hackett as he left the ring.

Except for the first round, the bout did not hold much to interest the fans. They wanted action but they saw a tall man and a short man weave about the ring warily tapping each other. Roy, after his lesson of the first round, was intent of keeping out of range of those long arms of the Toronto boy and was a little bit worried about Hackett's superior height. Hackett soon found out that the champion could hit hard and fast and began to avoid clinches. He seemed content to dart in, send home one or two quick jabs and then dance out of danger. Roy did not show any footwork at all.

He followed Hackett around the ring flatfooted, his legs wide apart. His head wearing from side to side, he thrust in rd, numbing punches to Hackett's midriff, which was at a convenient height for him. Wherever he got close enough, he slugged him two-handed, throwing overhand swings to his head and neck. Tactics remained unchanged till the last round, when both attempted to mix it and started missing in their eagerness.

FASTEST SPRINT AT BOWIE MEET

Algol Steps Three-Quarters In 1.19 — Joe Marrone III Wins the Feature

BOWIE, Md., April 10 — Reasoning told its tale in the best offering at Bowie Wednesday afternoon, when Mrs. T. R. Queen's Joe Marrone, III, was winner of the best offering, a mile and a sixteenth condition number. Mrs. R. Pollard's sprinter, Cog-old, raced to the place with Miss Fuller-ton's Cromwell third. All of these were seasoned by racing and back of them came Grey Coat, which took the measure of Miss Larkspur one after-noon last year and Voltear, rated as one of the truly good ones. They met both appearing under silks for the first time since last October.

There was a return of delightful racing weather. The track was fast and the crowd exceedingly large.

No time was last at the start of the Fairfax Purse, the feature, and it was Grey Coat and Cog-Old that went to the front at once with the sprinter under double wraps. Joe Marrone III was galloping smoothly back of them and Robertson was waiting for him. Voltear showed a flash of speed as he dropped back badly and was soon hopelessly out of the running.

$19,000 MISSING IN HOUSING ACCOUNTS

Ottawa, April 10—Shortages in the accounts of the Ottawa Housing Commission amounting to nineteen thousand dollars have been discovered by auditors in addition to the fifty thousand dollars' shortage in connection with which H. C. Latham, former secretary of the commission was recently sentenced to two years in the penitentiary.

Kingston, Ont., April 10—Despite a thorough search of the beach, woods and swamp by a posse under Provincial Constable Lloyd of Napanee, no trace has yet been found of Zoph Dean, Richmond township farmer, who has been missing since Monday morning. The posse resumed the search today.

CANADIAN CHAMP GETS BUSY

Jack Gunst, Canadian sculling champion, has decided to make another bid for the famous Diamond Sculls, which he so far eluded his grasp, and he has started a vigorous course of training with the intention of going over the English Henley in June. Gunst is hailed by the critics as the greatest stylist in the rowing world at the present time.

CANADIANS IN SEMI FINALS

Defeat Hamilton Ramblers 38-25 in I.O.B.A. Intermediate Play-off

TORONTO, April 10 — Canadian Ladies, intermediate cage champions of Toronto, advanced to the final of the I.O.B.A. last night at Central "Y" by defeating the Hamilton Ramblers 38 to 11, and winning the round 38 to 25. The Canucks now travel to Windsor to meet the Windsor girls in the first game of the I.O.B.A. finals. The game last night was a fast exhibition of basketball, and both teams snapped the ball around in quick plays. The Canucks were down at half time 3 to 6, but as usual the second half was theirs and they outscored the Ramblers 12 to 3.

The Canucks played an inspired game throughout and led by their star playing manager, Tony Conacher, made many systematic onslaughts on the Ramblers' goal. "Shorty" McCarthy and Marg. Coles and Connie Collison were the bright lights of the Canucks' scoring. Miss Collison scoring seven points. Edna Crawford Eva Bottoms and Bass Larsen all played stellar basketball and checked well. Hood Murphy had an off-night but was trying at all times.

TRADED GRIMES TO BRAVES TEAM

Boston In Return Handed Over Pitcher Jones and Cash

BOSTON, Mass., April 10—The trading of Burleigh Grimes, Pittsburgh pitcher, who has been a hold-out all Spring, to the Boston Braves, for Percy Lee Jones, a left-handed pitcher and a "large cash consideration" was announced here by Emil Fuchs, president of the Boston National League Club.

Grimes, right-handed ace of the Pirates pitching staff, refused to join the club at the training camp this Spring when his demands for a two-year contract calling for a $20,000 salary were refused by the Pittsburgh Club officials.

President Fuchs refused to give the exact figures of the cash consideration involved in the Grimes' trade, but said it was the second largest sum the Braves have ever paid for a ball players. Two years ago Fuchs paid for gave the New York Giants $100,000 for Rogers Hornsby, whom he later traded to the Chicago Cubs.

Jones, the southpaw pitcher mentioned in the deal, came from the Cubs in the Hornsby trade last year and had a poor season with the Braves.

The trade was made during a conference here between Grimes and President Fuchs. They came to an agreement with the Pittsburg Club by telephone.

Last night the Belleville Collegiate boys' basketball team played their last game of the season, at Peterboro, to decide unofficially the interscholastic championship in the O.B.A. and Belleville was beaten on the round by the small margin of three points. The Peterboro boys were in great form and played brilliantly while the locals kept right up to them spill the game was spill past the half-way mark. The final score was 38-23 for the Peterboro boys, which makes them the unofficial champions of the O.B.A. Interscholastic league.

The local lineup was as follows:

Right forwards —Bucky Calher and Louis Marchan.

Centres—McFee and Bradley.

Right Defence—Tom Byrnes and A. Biggs.

Left Defence—Harold Mott and Orrie Smith.

The senior baseball situation will be thoroughly discussed at a meeting to be held in the off-ice of the president, Major A. W. Pratt tonight. The team in trade to enter the Central Ontario Baseball League but there are certain matters that must be cleared off the table. The I.B.I club has a slight deficit on the year and arrangements will be made to wipe this deficit off before the opening of the season. The meeting tonight is not an open one but a general meeting will be called in the near future when officers for the year will be elected.

TELEVISION OF TWO-WAY TYPE

Demonstration in New York City As People Talk and See

New York, April 10—One more step in man's conquest of space which will bring the whole world closer together, and in the same room, through the development of a two-way television telephone system, was demonstrated for the first time yesterday afternoon by the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The demonstration was the fourth step in the development of television by the American Telephone and Telegraph. The latest development enabled both parties to the conversation to see and hear each other.

The receiving apparatus two representatives, one to the auditorium of the telephone company's building at 195 Broadway and another on the Bell Telephone laboratories at 15 Bethune Street, about two miles away.

One sees himself in a swivel chair and swings around to the right to face a strange apparatus. The first thing one sees is a blue spot of light Below that, through an inclined plate of glass, there is a small frame, upon which sees a new mysterious-looking word, "Honophone." Below that is the legend, "Watch this space for television images."

PURIFICATION WORK WILL BE MODERN PLANT

Up to Minute Filter Will Furnish Belleville With Clear Water

DETAILS OF THE PLANT

Some Changes Required In the Present Boiler Room

Belleville's proposed purification plant of which Messrs. Gore, Nasmith and Storrie, consulting engineers of Toronto, an internationally known firm, have prepared the plans and specifications and will supervise the construction, will be one of the most up-to-date filters in the Dominion.

The new plant will be to the south and east of the present pumping plant. The three settling basins or sedimentation tanks each of which will be operated independently of one another will be along the bay shore, the department using reclaimed land with the material taken from the excavations for the new plant. At the southeast corner the basins will be 70 feet, fifty feet out beyond the present shore line. These tanks total a length of 99 feet and have a width of 76 feet. North of the settling basins will be the filters underneath which are the clear water reservoirs covering an area of 66 feet 6 inches by 76 feet 8 inches.

The water will be introduced into the settling basins through a new design of weir in which the water is carried down along troughs and turns the water into a circular motion which collects the "flock" at the top by the effluent action. Chemicals before the water then passes into the settling basins.

From the settling basins the water flows into the filter beds by gravity. It passes through the filter beds into the clear water reserve through air seals which prevent backing of air and then is picked up by high lift pumps and sent to the city through the mains.

There are to be four filter beds each of nine million gallons capacity every twenty-four hours.

The economy in the construction of the plant is such that it can be extended to double the capacity or eight million gallons per day with an expenditure of about $45,000. The buildings which will be erected will be so laid out that extensions may be added to the north side.

The pure water storage basin will be covered with concrete and will cover the concrete posts. The settling basins will be covered with concrete and insulated roofing to prevent freezing.

Immediately all is the pure system. These pipes are under the special filter and will be laid from the basins to the filters. These pipes collect all the filtered water.

Two new electric lift pumps will be required along with one new wash water pump. The location of the present boiler in the pumping station will be changed out of the way of the new plant.

In the building over the filter beds will be the operating gallery, the floors of which will be terrazzo.

The filters can be cleaned in fifteen minutes by reversing the process.

Changes will be required in the boiler room.

The roof of the settling basins will be of the water in the bay. The bottom of the settling basins will be about three feet below water level in the bay and the clear water reservoir six feet below the water level.

The engineers, Messrs. Gore, Nasmith and Storrie, will have control of the plant for one year after it is constructed and put in use without charge. The provincial board of health officials have informed the engineers that they and the city will have the co-operation of that body for any length of time and will have any assistance required at any time.

Messrs. S. T. Austin of the Waterworks Department, who is the city official most interested in the future of the waterworks plant and the filter is enthusiastic over the progress made to date and foresees Belleville equipped with water purification works second to none.

It will be decided in a few days whether a second brick or other will be used in the facing of the filter building.

It will, it is believed, take about eight months to complete the plant. An early start on the plant is expected as the contract is soon to be awarded.

ABANDON HOPES OF FIVE POWER NAVY TREATY

France Demands 240,000 Tonnage Beyond Parity in Mediterranean

ITALY IS ADAMANT

Britain, U. S. and Japan Clear All Obstacles to Three-Power Pact

LONDON, April 10—Negotiations between naval delegations have practically assured the signing of a tripartite naval treaty between Great Britain, the United States and Japan, and, on the other hand, almost completely dashed the hopes of those who looked for a five-power pact of limitation. The day was thus divided between success and failure.

The conciliatory and reasonable attitude of the Japanese plenipotentiaries, a large measure of the successful conversations of the three great powers, Japan withdrew her request that she be allowed to transfer 20,000 tons from destroyers to submarines and with this action the last of the technical reservations which the Nipponese delegation had formerly held disappeared.

"Japan," it was announced "is now in complete accord with Great Britain and the United States." There remains only a minor question concerning training ships to be settled and it is expected this small matter will be out of the way by sunset tomorrow.

But efforts towards the five-power agreement failed to make headway today. Prime Minister MacDonald and M. Briand, the French Foreign Minister, conferred, and their conversations produced no great result. It was announced, however, from French headquarters that Britain and France were in agreement on the interpretation of Article 16, of the League of Nations covenant; that France was satisfied with the measure of security afforded her by the British definition.

PROMISE PROBE FIRE INSURANCE

Policies Issued with Mortgages on Non-existent Buildings

OTTAWA, April 10—Charging that insurance companies issued fire policies on building which in fact did not exist, George Spotton, Conservative member for North Huron, in the House of Commons yesterday, declared fire insurance companies of helping to rob the people of his district of $100,000.

Mr. Spotton, mentioning no names, declared that "through the fraudulent undertakings of a trusted lawyer" the people of Listowel, Stratford and of South Huron had lost this huge sum on fraudulent mortgages, given on buildings which did not really exist, but were supposed to have been erected on property in the vicinity of Toronto."

His own property, Mr. Spotton admitted, had had 18 of these mortgages and in every case an insurance policy was attached, describing a house or building which was purported to be erected on the property. Later, it was discovered that of all these properties, only six had buildings or any kind whatever.

Mr. Spotton's appeal for public protection against such "swindling" of fire insurance companies brought from Hon. Charles Dunning, Minister of Finance, a promise that the Dominion superintendent of insurance would make a full inquiry into the case. The Minister pointed out, however, that it was always possible that some of the companies might be provincial corporations and thereby outside the Dominion jurisdiction.

West Indies and Canada is Theme At Kiwanis Club

What free trade should be fostered between Canada and the British West Indies, as the West Indies have fruit in season and other commodities used in this country, while fish, dairy products and other articles are needed in these islands, was the thought expressed by Mackenzie Robertson, when he addressed the members of the Kiwanis Club at their weekly luncheon held in the Queen's Hotel Tuesday. The speaker also expressed the thought, that Canadians should travel to the West Indies in search of a holiday instead of spending the millions annually donated to the lower United States tourist centres. They will find the climate delightful and everything arranged for comfort and amusement. The interesting and instructive address was one of the finest that has been given to the club in some time and Kiwanian appreciation was expressed by A. Collins. C. Stanley Hardy in his inimitable way introduced the speaker of the day. President Jonah presided, Jack McIntosh collected the fines and Jos. Riggs accompanied for the community singing. Ross Hunter gave a delightful solo.

The speaker gave an interesting travelogue starting the journey at New York. They left the Big Apple at the end of February on the Steamer Columbrita and for 31 days, the steamer called at Nassau, the capital of the Bahama Islands of which Nassau is the capital. The climate is the same as the west coast of Florida with abundant fruit crops. The Island of New Providence has sold that is very rich with corn and all kinds of fruit. The speaker told of places he had visited on these two islands one in particular being "Dirty Cloth"—a bar with the old brass rail and all the trimmings. The name was given to the place as it resembled the place and the owner has surrounded it with a real artist. The next port of call was the Island of Jamaica the most beautiful of all the West Indies," said Mr. Robertson. The population is nearly all colored. Jamaica is productive as to tropical fruits. They have also large herds of humped back cattle, which are used only for work as fattening is the unknown quantity. The roads are good, the maintenance being done by native women on the roads basis.

Life in the Island of Jamaica is easy as nature is kind. Following Jamaica the Island of Trinidad was next visited. This island is quite good and very

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

LOVE BIRDS

By

Lena Gary Clark

Copyright, 1929, International Feature Service, Inc.

As Mr. Haynes placed the dish of porterhouse steak and sauted mushrooms on the supper table she caught sight of her daughter-in-law before the living room mirror. She bound the cheery Carolyn because she had become very fond of her. The younger woman wore an affected lively expression, while her lips moved silently as if she were reciting. Every now and then she consulted tiny notes held in the palm of her hand.

Mrs. Haynes shook her head, smiling a little grimly. In the six years that Carolyn and Jim had been living with her, the girl had been getting deeper and deeper into clubs and affectedness and further and further away from the kitchen. And poor Jim was sinking deeper and deeper into loneliness with occasional spurts at home making.

"Carolyn," suggested her mother-in-law casually, "would you mind putting the finishing touches to the salad, the cheese you know. You can do it so well."

The lovely brows drew together. "Can't you see, Mother, I'm trying to put the finishing touches on my speech for tomorrow afternoon?"

Carolyn turned a withering glance toward the elder woman. Mrs. Haynes gently withdrew to the kitchen. Her thoughts, however, rioted back over the years to the day, when Jim, apologetically, had asked if he might bring back new wife to live with her just for a few weeks until they could find a house they liked. With something of a prophet's vision, she had hesitated at first but had let them come. The week had lengthened to puzzled months and the months to troubled years.

Jim had come in beaming as usual. Just when the coffee finished perking. How carefully she planned their meals, watching the clock to see that the biscuits remained in the oven at a certain temperature for a certain number of minutes, making home-made dressing for the salads because Carolyn couldn't eat the store kind, never serving pork because it disagreed with Carolyn's "weak stomach". Carolyn, however, in spite of her weak stomach, had gained twenty-four pounds since she had married.

From the dining room Mrs. Haynes saw her son framed in the doorway, caught the swift little gesture of dejection from Carolyn, and saw a dejected look wipe out his usual good natured expression.

She heaped the gong a trifle maliciously. The face she turned full upon Jim was cheerful but she knew that it could not atone for Carolyn's.

"Goodness, I'm a most nervous wreck," her daughter-in-law complained as she mechanically kissed Jim seated at the table.

"Aren't you carrying your speaking efforts to the extreme?" questioned Jim.

Mrs. Haynes could feel Carolyn bristle.

"You simply don't understand," retorted Carolyn, who Mrs. Haynes knew was under the impression that she was a terrible worker.

Both her son and daughter-in-law ate with the former silent and cheerfully talkative, the latter realizing physical comfort like a cat. At the time their favorite dessert of charlotte ruse piled with whipped cream was brought in.

After supper Jim settled himself with the evening paper, while Carolyn eased herself luxuriously into the most comfortable chair and lamented. "I'm sorry, Mother, I don't feel equal to helping with the dishes. Just stack them in the sink."

Mrs. Haynes murmured it was quite all right and proceeded to do the dishes with dispatch.

"Oooh," she heard Jim exclaim as she set the breakfast table with Carolyn's favorite pottery dishes, "here's a peach of a house. See, mother?"

Something tightened in Mrs. Haynes' throat. It was so pathetic to hear Jim rave like a boy about a house and try to persuade Carolyn to go look at it. Only Carolyn never was interested. Jim's mother walked over to see the picture.

Grinning boyishly, Jim turned to Carolyn, "Look, Carrie, a sun parlor and room for a vegetable garden."

"Sun parlors are for birds and bats," birds," intoned Carolyn lazily, pulling a magazine at random from the near-by rack.

"It's a very nice house," advanced Mrs. Haynes as she moved away. She had to be so careful not to take sides. Jim took out pencil and paper and, like a boy with a drawing book began to make house. His mother knew that all the garden sections of the magazines were smeared and thumbed by Jim while the love stories were pored over by the girl.

Poor Jim wanted to lead a normal life and assume a man's responsibilities yet could not because he was hampered by a wife like Carolyn. Mrs. Haynes thought rebelliously. She straightened the grandfather spoon. Carolyn had become a parasite. Something just had to be done or soon Carolyn's nerves would be frayed. Maybe it was too late now. No; she refused to believe that.

In the living room, darning Jim's sock's which Carolyn refused to darn, Mrs. Haynes reflected. She had tried leaving Jim and Carolyn to the house alone but discovered upon her return that they had gone out to all meals and the house was full of dust.

Jim and Carolyn, though, she was devoted to them, just had to get out of her house for their own good. She had made it for convenience for them. Jim seemed unable to solve the situation because he was so deeply in love with Carolyn.

The darning lay beneath her idle hands while she pondered. Finally, just as Jim began his nightly game of solitaire, Mrs. Haynes had an idea so startling it nearly made her jump out of her chair. She stole a look at Carolyn to see if she had noticed. Eyes starring, she snatched up the unfinished sock and began to weave in and out.

The next evening when Jim came home, the coffee wasn't perking. Mrs. Haynes hadn't even lighted the stove. Jim's face was so instantly shocked over this unprecedented fact that his mother, standing up in him from where she was wrapping a cover over a bird cage, inwardly smiled.

"I had no idea it was so late. I was so busy caring for Margie's birds."

"Did she lend them on you?" inquired his belligerent son.

"Well, I don't mind at all. You know I really like birds. But has more than she knows what to do with."

She tied the gay cover securely, then headed for the kitchen.

The supper was a hurried up affair. The two sat there together, the biscuits scorched. Mrs. Haynes apologized her face innocent, but both knew that she was plainly annoyed.

"I should think, Mother," suggested Carolyn, "you'd have your hands full without taking in birds."

"But they brighten up the kitchen considerably," Mrs. Haynes answered, her hands folded gently in her lap.

"But the way they sing!" she complained.

The birds did sing. They began at six in the morning and sang the entire day through, swelling their little yellow throats until they nearly burst. All because of Mrs. Haynes' meticulous care. And now Carolyn complained that they nearly drove her crazy.

The meals, which for six years had been served by the clock, now became gradually hashed up affairs. Often the meat was tough or the rolls were soggy. After a particularly unsavory supper one night Jim pounced upon the week-end bag. Carolyn pounced upon the week-end bag.

"Oooh, this is a peach of a house. Look Carolyn," Mrs. Haynes, standing by the breakfast table, heard Jim exclaim.

Carolyn jumped up. "Let me see it." Mrs. Haynes' heart missed a beat. Could it be possibly true that Carolyn was taking interest. Yes; together they studied the plans, the location, the price. They lowered their voices. Mrs. Haynes grieved.

"Mother," confided Carolyn the next morning. "Jim and I have decided to buy a house. We've always had that in mind you know. Jim— well Jim hated to tell you."

There was a pause.

"Yes, Carolyn," helped Mrs. Haynes, "I can understand terribly, but I'm so glad about the house. Sit down and tell me all about it. The closets, are they deep, and how about the cellar?"

Mrs. Haynes' pulses were racing.

The day after Jim and Carolyn moved into their very own home, Mrs. Haynes tied all the covers a bit reluctantly over the four bird cages and returned them to her sister, Margie. Stifling, she penned the following note "Thanks for the use of your birds. I'm sending them back. Sincerely yours."

She heard Jim coming down the walk. A pause. Ceclia's clear metallic voice.

What fear fast she faint had swept over Ardeth, she rubbed at her cold cheeks and crouched down behind the pew. Mustn't do that. Oh, Ken would never forgive her. Shadows and lights and the group in the altar swimming before her sick eyes.

They were turning. Standing Ardeth pressed a hand hard over her mouth, crouched closer to the pillar.

They came down the nave attended by a convoy of echoes, passing close to the pew where a girl crouched in anguish.

Voices on the steps. The roar of a starting motor Ken—going the rest with his wife... Oh, dear God!

Ardeth waited. The church a few minutes later the minister was startled to see a woman bound out of the chapel. A girl, who held her head high and rushed wildly past him into the rainy night.

Those bitter moments when she crouched in the church and saw Ken married to Cecil's were a turning point in Ardeth's life. Not even Kirk ever knew of the hours which followed. Hours when every vague to Ardeth herself. She was living so intensely in the mental, that the physical had almost ceased to exist.

Years of misery passed in that single night. And from them on she was changed in some subtle way from the dreamy shy girl she had been. She took on a life with eyes stripped and illusion. But eyes which were also afraid. The gnawing fear which had lurked behind all things. Fear of Mendel that vague fear of the future was gone forever. One does not fear when one does not hope.

Something of vividness grew from her beauty. A dimming of the golden radiance of youth. New depths in the hazel eyes. A strange stillness in her face, as that one had the impression of gazing into still and very deep water.

Mary Eastwood felt this the next day when she came into the Caprice and walked directly over to Ardeth, who was checking stock in the back of the store.

Mary's dark eyes were soft with sympathy. She put her arms about Ardeth and kissed her.

"Poor child," she said.

Ardeth gently drew out of her embrace. Her eyes were dry, but revealed lids.

"Those things just got to. Aren't they lovely?" She nodded to the bauble shiny bracelet of silver and marble which lay on the table before her. At the handbag of Oriental silk with an intricate ivory clasp, at the shell-back hand mirror.

Mary's cuddled white hands took the girl's face between them and looked it up to her own.

"Ardeth you know?"

The lovely face worked for a moment. "Of course," she replied huskily.

Mary's hands dropped and clenched. "Oh, damn!" she got out between her teeth. "Life's so beastly unfair."

The girl drew a long breath. Returned to her checking.

Mary spoke in a moment, then, without looking up, Ardeth said "This was what you meant . . . about comforting me?"

"Yes," said Mary.

The girl went on, a ruth in her words like the echo of a lonely little wind. "I was afraid of it. Always afraid of something. I think I knew that I could never come true. Even on the very first it didn't seem—real."

Mary spoke bitterly. "Cecil had made up her mind to get him. But it Ardeth gulped. "Does she—does she

The girl drew a long breath. "I really love him?"

Mary's voice was dry. "She wants him. That's reason enough for Cecil."

Ardeth turned around. Leaned on the table, turning her piteous gaze on Mary.

"But why . . . why . . . without love . . ."

"She wasn't blind for all she pretended not to see or care how much he was with you. Don't you see, it was an affront to her." She's vain as the devil and had been foolishly labeled here. That thing in the city needed her. She wasn't going to have Ardeth Lane around. Such things was something else, too. The Parkers are newspaper people, money to. That's worried Cecile. Ken's family belonged to the old aristocracy. Such things count with Cecile."

He reached over to cover her hand with his own warm one.

"Ah, little kid, don't let it crush you. I knew. I was afraid. . ."

The golden eyes opened. Up to meet his blue eyes and at the suffering he saw there, Tom blinked.

"I was afraid to!" she said steadily "But ill never be afraid again. There's nothing in life which can make me afraid now."

"We advise Palmolive"

... because of its safe, soothing cosmetic oils"

says

J. NELSON DAY

well-known beauty expert of TORONTO

"SOAP and water cleanliness is a basic part of all our home beauty treatments. But not any soap will do. We specify Palmolive." So says this beauty shop. And more than 19,800 beauty specialists of distinction, here and abroad, also specify Palmolive.

Why vegetable oils are best

There is a soothing, penetrating quality about a vegetable oil soap lather that searches down into the tiniest pores and frees them of the day's accumulation without hurting the fabric of the skin. As you know, the skin is very sensitive, and must be very carefully handled. Palmolive lather does not irritate. It leaves the skin soft and smooth, and in wonderful condition for your beauty expert's treatment.

Dangerf to skin beauty

Unless the skin is thoroughly cleansed twice a day, dirt and dust and cream and make-up gather in the pores of your face and soon become hard little accumulations which develop into blackheads and pimples. Then unsightly blemishes are a sign of neglect on your own part. Use the right soap, use the right cleansing method, and you are taking the best steps toward complexion beauty.

Palmolive is a pure vegetable oil soap. Its color is the natural color of palm and olive oils. The delicate natural odor of these vegetable oils makes the addition of heavy perfumes unnecessary.

With both hands make a smooth lather of Palmolive Soap and warm water. Massage this gently into the skin, both face and throat, for about two minutes. Then rinse it off with warm water until you can actually feel the accumulation being swept away. Now, give a final rinse with cold water, even icy water. This is refreshing, and closes the pores, preventing too much dirt and grease from getting underneath the surface of the skin.

Consult your beauty expert

There is only one person truly qualified to advise you, and that is a trained professional beauty expert, who has spent time and study learning how best to care for your good looks. When she tells you to use Palmolive you have the highest possible authority, and 19,813 such experts, today, advise this vegetable oil soap. You will probably use it for the bath as well as the face. It costs only 10c a cake, you know ... little enough to pay for a safeguard to beauty.

J. Nelson Day is an expert beautician whose experience and training qualify him to advise Toronto's smartest women.

This leader in the beauty profession represents a salon with modern, scientific methods and a skilful, well-trained staff. It is such experts who advise their patrons to use Palmolive Soap.

"Your skin must be kept clean and free of irritation. The vegetable oils in Palmolive Soap are soothing, refreshing, penetrating. You should use this palm and olive oil soap twice a day to safeguard complexion beauty."

GIRL UNAFRAID

BY

Gladys Johnson

She knew wild terror lest she rush out there and scream at them to stop.

No! Never—never so that! That was silly! Silly and dramatic. What good could it do after all? As though she had done in imagination showed her Ken's shocked white face. Mrs. Parker's astonished and affronted one Cecile's contemptuous curled lip . . .

Wicked that Cecile should have the Ken she loved! Oh, wicked . . .

She crouched in the gloom of the pews, chewing her lips to keep from breaking into sobs. She rubbed her forehead wearily. Impatiently straining her gaze to that group in the front of the church.

Her heart leaped, beat in her throat. They had changed places. Ken was beside Cecile. Facing the minister in his white surplice.

"Oh . . . no!" whispered Ardeth with stiff lips. At the sound of the minister's voice her heart went sick with her.

"Dearly beloved, we are gathered here today"—

The sonorous voice woke soft echoes in the vaulted roof.

Ardeth's nails drove into the palms of her hands, breaking the skin. She felt weak, as though the blood were leaving her heart drop by drop.

The echoes multiplied, tying with the spoken word until it reached the crouching girl in a soft rush as though a multitude of ghosts whispered up to her.

They actually sang Carolyn into a home of her own."

THE BRIDGE AT NIGHT

Thoughts cannot but run back to the days when Longfellow's poem used to be read in the schools, "I stood on the bridge at midnight as the clocks were striking the hour," when the city council meets o'nights to settle the important question of the new lower bridge. The allusion is made more perfect still in the fact that in the poem the moon was rising up behind the grey church tower and just this week the moon becomes full and late o' nights it is sure to be moonlight. There is another brave allusion, that of Horatius, who stood on a bridge and held back the enemies of Rome.

Bridges have been important things in the past and just now the one that is proposed is of great importance to the city. Council has asserted that the work is to go forward once the tenders are let. Tonight the council will again to hear a report from the special committee on the sixteen tenders for reinforced concrete and the twelve for steel construction.

With so many tenders the city is assured of keenest competition in the work.

Tonight when the council-meets it there is a long debate the citizens may say tomorrow:

"The council talked on the bridge at midnight
As the clock was striking the hour
And the moon rose o'er the city
Behind the brick hall tower."

THE PROOF OF SPRING

Spring is here despite the chilling winds of the past few days and the recent flurry of snow which gave the air a November feeling.

The proof that spring is here is that it is in the heart of the song sparrow or rossignol. Tuesday morning despite the little flurry of snow and the below-freezing temperature in the early morning found these little vehicles of song perched in the bushes pouring out the most melodious of notes. Although man cannot interpret them in exact words, rossignol's message doubtless has to do with the glad time which is just ahead.

MOVIE STANDARDS

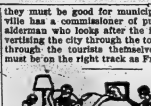
Will Hays of Hollywood is to be given credit for the new declaration of independence or bill of rights of the moving picture industry.

The industry, it says, has banned suggestion and treatment of those crimes which are unspeakable, has declared for a properly graded stage in moviedom, and abolished attempts at levity in regard to purity and religion.

The common sense of the people who frequent the movies triumphs in this forward step just as well as the self-discipline and self government of the screen profession. Some people used to say that the stage was too vile to be attended by people of repute but that attitude was surely wrong. It is the people who attend the theatre who mould it, not the theatre which moulds the people, though in a large sense the theatre does mould opinion and customs but not because of an inherent evil, rather by its good qualities.

An Ottawa paper discusses, however, the new standard of the movie and treats it as so many previous declarations, saying that the ground for interpretation is wide. It asks who will select the standards. It argues that the "real trouble with the talkies is not the occasional scenes of passion and law-breaking, but the cheap and false conception of life which most of them reflect.

"A scene of passion' (whatever that means) does less harm than the constant advancement of the idea for example, that flagwavers are always gentlemen of honor, and that anyone who disagrees with the principles of the wage system is a scoundrel and a dangerous fellow. And, finally, there is this to be said—if you applied the new standard to recognized works of art, they would nearly all be ruled out of court. Shakespeare would be totally unfit for screening."



This inclines to the opinion that this declaration is so much bunk given out as a sop to the public. While the declaration has yet a chance to be proven true, that view does not tain this truth that the danger of moviedom is the cheap and tawdry conception of life that is inculcated. Movies like all forms of entertainment, must stoop to the lowest common denominator, it must appeal to the average mentality of the crowds who frequent the amusement halls. That is a real danger.

COMMISSION OF TOURISM

While the western world is playing to the tourists and Canada knows a little of the efforts being made to attract visitors from other lands, it must not be forgotten that Europe and parts of Asia look upon the tourist trade as a great value. In no country is the tourist more appreciated than in France which profits from the visitors and their purchases. France like other European countries has a great deal to offer to the tourist class.

The French are nothing if not logical and it is o natural consequence to find that there is now a French commissioner of Tourism. It will be his business to inquire into the slump in touring and to discover remedies for the new condition. He will busy himself with inns, pleasure resorts, roads, trains, and comforts as well as prices which are charged the guests of the republic. He will even "play up" the glories of French wines.

If commissioners are so good for France they must be good for municipalities. Belleville has a commissioner of publicity and an alderman who looks after the interests of advertising the city through the tourist camp and through the tourists themselves. Belleville must be on the right track as France is.

SIDELIGHTS

DOORS

Some doors I pass, though shut with bolt and bar,
To me seem always standing half ajar,
For friends behind those kindly portals wait,
With whom I find a welcome, soon or late.

Some doors mean nothing, neither joy nor pain,
Nor shining dreams that dawn or hopes that wane,
For careless strangers through them come and go,
Who know me not, whom I shall never know.

And other doors -with grim forbidding stand
To block my way, nor have I at command
An open sesame to enter there
And face my enemies' relentless stare.

If ever I should pass along a place
Where every doorway seemed a smiling face
And all were welcome in those calm retreats,
Then I should know I trod on Heaven's streets!

LEST WE FORGET! As we said before we think that something should be done to protect school children from traffic accidents in the neighborhood of St. Agnes' School on Bridge street, where the children of St. Michael's Academy, Queen Alexandra Public School and Collegiate Institute have occasion to cross the busy street several times a day. There should be at least warning signs apprising motorists that this is a school zone. Now that the traffic is getting heavier there will be many motorists using Bridge Street who will not be aware that there is a dangerous school zone between Ann and William streets.

BYRD ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION is returning from its long vigil in the vicinity of the South Pole. This very much ballyhooed expedition no doubt will bring back many valuable scientific discoveries to add to the data gathered for many years at both poles at great expense in time, money and human lives. Whether the game was worth the candle or not remains to be seen, but we have been hearing so much about "Little America" on the radio for a year past or more that something worth while must surely come out of it.

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE in London keeps on spending much money and not getting anywhere particular as far as the average man can discern. Just don't seem possible that nations can sit down together and stick each other's ships right and left without striking a snag somewhere. Looks like the irresistible force striking an immovable body, except there, as far as practical results are concerned. But then it may be a great big diplomatic game where everybody is trying to find out just where the other fellow stands, and why.

WHEN FOOD FAILS

Defective Digestion is the Cause and Misery Follows

There are thousands of people who do not get the proper nourishment from the food they eat, because their digestion is defective. Food that lies undigested in the stomach is not merely wasted. It will ferment and poison your system. Flatulence and sour risings in the throat follow and unless you are careful you will become a chronic dyspeptic.

By toning up the stomach to do the work nature intended, you will remove the cause of the trouble. Nothing will more promptly restore the digestive organs than good new blood. Stomach, nerves and glands do better nutrition in building up and enriching the blood that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food have proved successful in so many cases of indigestion where ordinary medicines have failed. The new rich blood quickly tones up the digestive organs; the appetite improves and you are able to eat with comfort and get full nourishment from your food.

You can get Dr. Chase's Nerve Food through the dealer in medicine, or by mail at 50c. a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Stomach Should Have Regular Rest

TO AVOID INDIGESTION, SAYS DR. BISCH

STOMACH

BY LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D.
Famous Authority on Health and Nutrition

Gastritis means, literally, an inflammation of the lining of the stomach. Whether it be acute, lasting only a day or so, or whether it be a continual, chronic complaint, the diet is always important.

I do not wish it to be inferred however, that improper diet is all that is necessary. There are such cases to be sure, especially those of the acute type which most often are caused not by indiscretions in eating.

On the other hand chronic indigestion especially, and often acute gastritis as well, can be caused by bad eating habits. It may also be related to the stomach indirectly.

The cause, therefore, should always be sought. For, no matter what diet is used, if the cause for the upset is not removed, no permanent relief can be hoped for.

If vomiting and nausea are prominent symptoms it is best to give the stomach a complete rest for a day or two. Even water should be restricted under such conditions. For three cracked ice can be used.

In acute cases milk and broths should be the only foods taken. Later on cereals and toast may be added. Later still, preserves, tapioca or rice pudding, cooked fruit-baked or soft boiled eggs, also butter are easily borne. Meals had better be avoided for a week or so, also coarse vegetables or any food that is likely to irritate.

Dr. McAdoo suggests the following diet of what is suitable for chronic gastritis.

7 a.m.—One orange juice.
8.00-8.30—BREAKFAST:
2 tablespoonsful oatmeal strained through cheesecloth
1 poached egg, 1 teaspoonful and 2 tablespoonfuls cream.
1 poached egg, an average sized slice of bread toasted

1 glass milk
11 a.m.—Milk shake (made with 1 egg, 1 teaspoonful sugar and milk)
1.00-1.30—DINNER:
1 French lamb chop, some fat
Medium sized baked white potato with 1 teaspoonful butter
2 heaping tablespoonsful spinach
2 medium sized slices of bread toasted
2 heaping tablespoonsful rice custard with 1 tablespoonful whipped cream
1 glass milk
1-2 tablespoonful butter
4 p.m.: Milk shake.
6.00-6.30—SUPPER:
2 soft boiled eggs
2 heaping tablespoonfuls cream of wheat with 1 teaspoon butter.
2 heaping tablespoonfuls puree of green peas
1 very ripe banana baked with 1 teaspoonful sugar and lemon juice
2 average sized slices stale bread or toast and 1 tablespoonful butter
1 glass milk.
8.30 or 9.00—Glass milk.

Modifications of the above can, of course, be made from day to day.

Chicken or roast lamb or tender roast beef may be substituted for the lamb chop at dinner.

Squash, puree of lima beans, mashed carrots, creamed cabbage are likewise good vegetable substitutes.

The points to that readily digestible foods should always be given.

TO PHOTOGRAPH TROPICAL FISH

BOSTON, April 10.—A motion picture studio in the heart of a submarine jungle with the myriads of tropical fish as actors is soon to be established by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur C. Pillsbury who will sail about the middle of May from San Francisco for the Fiji Islands.

The studio, probably the most remarkable that man has ever conceived, will have for its stage a bed of white coral, its scenery will be the gorgeous and fantastic plants which abound in tropical waters and the background will be a coral forest of every imaginable color. A battery of delicate and elaborately constructed cameras housed in special boxes, with remote controls for operation, will photograph the denizens of the deep, who, from the beginning of time have lived their lives far away from the prying eyes of mankind.

Gesticulations of tremendous proportions, fairy tails that can shoot thousands of poisoned darts, hermit crabs and tropical starfish, the unusual and spectacular sea-anemone —which is an animal, not a flower — will all be "shot" by the scientist and his wife, clad in bathing suits plus diver's helmets and air hoses, from a safe distance behind the cameras. Not only will every movement of the little characters be photographed as the scenes takes place, but they will be photographed by the latest process of natural color photography in both still and motion pictures. Mr. Pillsbury expects the temperature of the water to be about 70 degrees and plans to stay below the surface about an hour at a time.

The man who is to undertake this assignment is considered one of the leading micro-photographers and pictorialists of the world. He is a former New England man, living in Medford, Mass., before moving to San Francisco. He began his career as a news photographer on the San Francisco Examiner at the time of the great earthquake. He was the first man to fly through the Grand Canyon with a motion picture camera and during the last two years he has startled the scientific world as well as the American public with his motion pictures of underwater subjects heretofore unknown. Mr. Pillsbury is the first man to photograph successfully by X-rays the blooming of a rose, from bud to bloom; the knitting of a fractured bone in a rodent's leg, the pulsations of the corpuscles of blood and sap in a fruit's foot and in an oak leaf respectively, and the fertilization of the protoplasm and nucleus of a grain of pollen at the very moment that the pollen germinates and his tropical fish scenes are to be the first ever to be shown on a screen with a magnification of more than one hundred thousand times. A hot man of war fish appears to be 185 miles high if he were photographed and magnified on the same scale.

Mr. Pillsbury plans to bring some of the specimens to the surface for further study and for this purpose he has had constructed, out of optical glass, thirty aquariums ranging in size from four to six feet down to three to four inches. "One of the chief difficulties in taking the portable aquarium on this expedition," Mr. Pillsbury said, "will be to keep fresh salt water circulating through the tanks at all times and at the same temperature that exists below the surface of the sea. I have built a very elaborate thermostatic control, which, with a pumping control will, I believe, solve the difficulty."

The scientist will be able to show the living conditions of his subjects below the surface of the ocean by taking the pictures at the proper speed of sixteen pictures a second and by bringing the same specimens to the surface, in varying stages of age and development and placing them in aquariums, it will be possible, by the stop motion, or lapse life method, to show the actual growth of the animal or plant from birth to death.

The photographic apparatus which Mr. Pillsbury plans to use under the water will be encased in special boxes constructed of brass with optical glass windows. These boxes have been put through rigid tests to ensure their reliability. They were submerged in San Francisco harbor for twelve days under similar conditions and even when taken out were found to be absolutely dry. He has also built a new type of tripod, weighing sixty-five pounds, out of mononel.

Pillsbury has no delusions concerning the dangers of this assignment. "If I should happen to step into the open shell of one of these tropical clams that are in some instances three feet across and weighs from 300 to 500 pounds, it would be all over, or again if we should be interrupted by a pair of barracudas, who dash through the water with jaws agape, it would be very disconcerting." When questioned about the 200 pound clam, he said, "I have seen a photograph of one of the many owned by the Rockefellers at Jekyll Island."

Many and varied forms of dangerous fish abound in the waters which the scientist has chosen for his headquarters. Poisonous jelly fish of enormous breadth, a mere contact with which spells instant death, the sting-ray, the octopus and the under-sea monster which can deal a paralyzing electric shock to anything caught with its baby arms will form an ever constant menace to the pairs and the safety of Mr. and Mrs. Pillsbury. Then he waters are infested with man-eating sharks, but both the scientist and his wife feel that like the hunter of the wild land jungles they will not molest human beings if they are let alone, so, disregarding warnings from more timid scientists this naturalist will undertake his task with the confidence that he will be too busy taking pictures to worry about the dangers involved.

Think of the Canadians trying to help us become a dry nation!

Stop and think again why our Sister of the Snows is so much concerned in our personal habits!

Premier Mackenzie King and R. B. Bennett, leading figures in the Canadian Parliament's fight to outlaw importation of liquor into the United States, are crafty gentlemen — descendants with Scotch ancestors.

If they can prevent the shipment of liquor into the United States, people from this country must come to go up into Canada and get it. If it is sold to bootleggers, it brings only the whole price per case. The profit, then, goes to the manufacturers and the government agents, and not to the people of the States will visit Canada in order to consume it, the Dominion gets all it wants or best served in the saloons, the tavern keepers get his. And then the hotels get a slice of Americans' money. The filling stations and Canadian roadsides get theirs and if there is anything left the stores will sell our tourists some linens, a Hudson Bay blanket, a pair of driving gloves or bottle of perfume for 25 to 50 per cent, less than the merchandise may be purchased on this side of the line.

American tourists flock to Canada simply by the million now. If the Canadian Government stops sending liquor into the United States the number of tourists visiting the Dominion will double next summer.

Clever men, these Canadian brethren! They will not only finish paying their war debt, but they will construct a wonderful system of highways at our expense.

Arthur Cutten Is Relentless Pursuit of 1925 Robbery

(Canadian Press)

CHICAGO, April 10.—A confession that he participated in a record cash and dollar robbery at the country home of Arthur W. Cutten, speculator and grain dealer, in 1922, was made yesterday, Police Commissioner Russell said, by Simon Rosenberg, alias Charles Davis. Rosenberg is the fifth of six men who, according to Mr. Cutten, invaded his home and, after seizing $17,000 in jewelry, $5,000 in cash and several cases of fine liquor, bound the family and servants in the vault and fled. In his relentless pursuit of robbers, one a former servant, Cutten has sent two to prison, two confessed and are on parole, and only Rosenberg's brother Carpel remains at large.

The aim of the university according to Dr. Metzler will be to the development of character to be a specific purpose of instruction.

7,000 WALNUT TREES PLANTED ON HIGHWAY

(Canadian Press)

ST. THOMAS, Ont., April 10.—The ceremony of planting seven thousand black walnut trees along both sides of the sixty mile stretch of the King's Highway No three, across Elgin County was carried out with elaborate early today. Plans were perfected by Dr. C. D. Lumley, originator of the idea, and early various road foremen and their gangs were at work placing the trees in the ground. During the morning each of twenty-one schools along the highway had a little ceremony of its own. Black walnut trees used for the purpose were secured on the government forestry reserve at St. Williams.

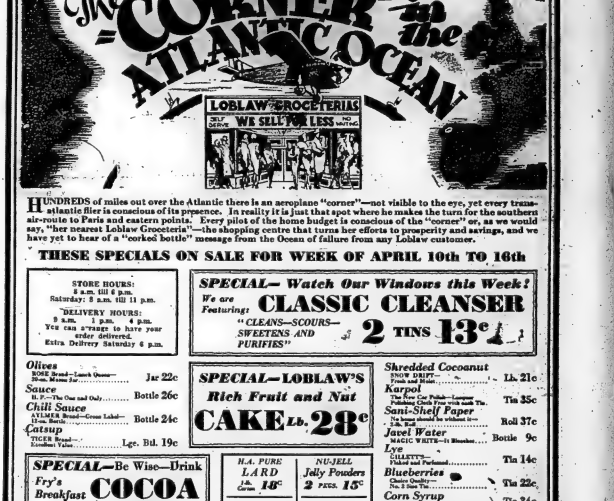
THE RIGHTS OF MOTHER-HOOD



TORONTO, April 8—While in Denmark born in 600 out of every 1,000 mother's death, the rate in Toronto is considerably more than three times this high. The relative figures for maternal mortality are 6.3 per thousand here as against 2.0 there. In 1928 the local figure was still 8.2, or, being recorded as 8.3 per thousand as against 2.0 for the whole of Ontario. Yet this city is a great medical centre. Vital statistics are notoriously dangerous especially in comparing a whole country with a single city; yet here is a discrepancy that no one must ask what is the explanation. Certainly it cannot be that Toronto has a lack of doctors.

Then can it be that in spite of rank and fashion even because of the powerfulness of the medical fraternity women do not always receive the proper skilled care most suitable for the hazardous experience they must undergo?

A difference in method of treatment stands out. In Toronto, as throughout Ontario, the doctor always has charge of the case. In the Scandinavian countries the nation is that the prospective mother has 'the attention of a specially trained nurse

MRS. JOE WRIGHT NOW KNOWN AS SCULLING BRIDE

Husband Teaching Her — May Be Seen in Shorts and Sweater

TORONTO, April 7.—"That'll do for today, Martha."

Such were orders issued to his new daughter by Mr. Joe Wright, Sr., at the Argonaut Rowing Club yesterday. Martha Norelius, the famous swimmer and winner of women's marathons, was greatly interested in her husband's work, so much so that she temporarily dispensed with the joys and sorrows of puttering about a kitchenette to spend her morning with her husband at the club where she is being initiated into the mysteries of sculling.

"The sculling bride" would be an appropriate designation for Martha, who has taken up the sport with enthusiasm.

Young Mrs. Wright was clad in navy blue jersey shorts which fitted tightly over her sun-tanned graceful limbs. She was also wearing a gray sweater and over her golden Norelius hair she wore a darker mesh turban which his fellow oarsmen-row with, the name of Norelius. While she discussed her new apartment and the furnishings she slipped into a broad skirt and coat and not infrequently cast admiring glances at her absent husband, who was out in the breakwater training for 20 miles to enter for the diamond sculls again this year. Martha will accompany him to England.

INDIGNANT WIFE—"I don't also gether object to your teaching Wi fred to Cook with a gun, but it comes to something when I don't remind you, father to pose mother's photograph as a target."

Business Girls Should Have Dignity

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Do you think it proper for a married woman who, going to business, allows an office boy and other men to address her by her first name and not "Mrs."? I think if they are allowed this privilege, they think it allows them more, and they will lose respect.

M. J. W.

I agree with you. Whole-heartedly and enthusiastically. This business woman should have dignity, either native or'al least acquired, that there would not be even a possibility of office boys presuming to call her by her first name. For a woman who would allow them to call her by her first name they certainly would lose respect.

MRS. BEECKMAN.

It is all right for a bride to wear silver slippers with a white dress, or most white slippers be worn?

I have a pair of silver pumps with rhinestone buckle and I would like to wear them if it is all right. M.B.

This kind of slipper would not be most suitable or appropriate for your white wedding dress, for they would call for much attention to themselves. It would be better to have white satin slippers.

Don't Be Victorian In This New Age

Beatrice Fairfax Advises Old "Fogies"

A Authority on Problems of Love and Marriage

A woman has written me a letter I'd like to broadcast in hopes it would reach every intelligent gentleman who has fallen out of step with modern conditions. Rapid flirtation is in, this type still gives a pretty good account of itself.

My correspondent deals with a husband who would be liberal with his family if he had the means—failing that, he is contemptuous of their efforts to help—and who in modern ways generally speaking.

Under all these accusations, the daughters of such men would remain under the roof till they married the husbands he was more than likely to choose for them. He was affectionately, if several, domineering and regarded his family as a personal possession.

He delighted to deck his wife and daughters with expensive clothes and jewelry—they were the sheer cases that told the world how prosperous was father.

But "the old order changeth, yielding place to new," and mothers can't afford to keep their daughters at home and deck them with diamonds set in platinum are lessening in these days of keen competition. Even if the Victorian father could afford to keep his daughters home, it is unlikely they'd stay there. More and more girls go into business, industry, the professions.

They enjoy contact with the world and realize it gives them greater opportunities for success and happiness than staying at home and waiting for the casual suitor, as women did a generation or two ago.

But the Victorian father is not of this generation, and the new order—daughters going out to work and mingling latchkeys as well—disturbs him and makes him fretful. The lady who wrote me the letter must be what is known as a good scout. Not trained to any business, or profession, yet, when her husband failed to do the work of more than fifty cents in the family budget, she contrived a good many ways to make a penny.

She does fine hand sewing, simple dressmaking, bakes fruit cakes for a delicatessen store takes subscriptions for magazines. The money she has earned practically provided the business education which has helped the daughters to get good jobs. They all contribute to the family fund, and everything would be delightful if it were not for father's wailing for the good old days that are no more.

Things have come to such a pass that the girls want to break up, go away, and take mother with them. She who is the real martyr, as the saying state, doesn't want to do that. In spite of everything, she is devoted to the husband of her youth, who has been soured by adversity.

But, as she says, it's terribly hard on the girls to make foolish jokes about her "style" when people come to the house to see some of the family. They have to listen to his smart remarks when they come to enter a birthday cake.

If there are no strangers present—either customers or friends—father is quite lovable, but as a man of the world one of the daughters to a movie and he begins his tirade on girls with the result that the departed party of all day when girls adorned the home.

It may sound like wasted sympathy on my part, but I can't help feeling sorry for father. He takes a morbid pleasure in belittling his family before strangers because he feels he has failed to provide for them as he would like to provide. As a matter of fact, he succeeded in doing so remarkably well. The poor old fellow is like a drowning man who pulls down his helper.

The girls have youth and opportunities on their side, and love her home—it seems foolish to think of breaking it up on account of the tantrums of a poor old gentleman.

The Oil for the Farmer—A bottle of Dr. Thomas Electric Oil in the farm house will save many a journey for the doctor. It is not only good for the children when taken with oils and croup, and for the mature who suffer from pains and aches, but there are directions for its use on sick cattle. There should always be a bottle of it in the house

Advice to Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

SHALL WE GIVE HIM UP?

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Jack is of a higher social class, while I'm in the working class. He tells me he love me and. I love him so much. But when he comes to see me he tells his parents he goes somewhere else and he never has time to take me anywhere. Shall I give him up?

TOOTS.

I cannot believe Toots, that there will be any happiness for you in continuing a friendship wherein the boy plays his part so grudgingly and with such nonchalantness of his higher social position. I admit that disappointed love can hurt very cruelly, even at sixteen, but it is also true that you have plenty of time for recovery. You are so honest and courageous that you deserve a better friend that Jack could be, I should think, and I advise you to give him up definitely before the situation has involved you in any further suffering.

A DANGEROUS FAULT

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

My boy friend has only one fault He drinks too often and too much. But when I beg him to swear off, he laughs and says everything will be all right when we are married. Shall I believe this, or do you think I ought not to marry him?

IRMA

A man who cannot control his appetite or drink—still more, one who does not even wish to—is not a fit husband for any woman. I believe that every sensible person will agree with me. If your fiance would still go on an ex cursus to meet your wishes now, even if he partly failed, there might be some hope. But since he doesn't take the matter seriously, he would probably drink more, rather than less, after you are married. I must advise you to break off this engagement now, my dear Irma, and to forget the young man if you possibly can.

India has been experimentingfor with concrete roads, building streets for them in Benares and just outside that city.

COOLIDGE HOME TO BE OPENED

Former Owner Will Pilot Reporters Through the "Beeches"

So many newspaper reporters want to see The Beeches, new home of Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, that Mrs. Morris L. Cosney, who sold it to the former President, but who is still in possession of the place, has consented to pilot a party through the mansion.

Mrs. Cosney has imposed one restriction upon her invitation—male reporters only will be admitted.

Mrs. Cosney told local newspaper men today that she had received calls for information from newspapers as far west as Chicago.

The Beeches was described by Mr. Coolidge when he purchased it as a "modest place with a little land". Actually, it is a sixteen-room house, with nine acres of grounds, a swimming pool, tennis courts and spacious gardens. The house contains four baths, an elevator and numerous other conveniences.

When to Send a Wedding Present

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Will you please tell whether or not it is appropriate and customary in all cases, upon receipt of a wedding announcement, to send a wedding gift, even though the person in question is not an intimate friend?

—APPRECIATE READER.

With the multitude of flying weddings in our midst, again comes the important and almost unanswerable question of whether or not we should send wedding presents. As a matter of fact, no one can tell you whether or not you should send a wedding present, for sending presents is a question or should be, of one's own choice. That is, if one wishes to send a present, one may and does, and if one does not, one should not, and does not.

I with that were as easy as it sounds.

Receiving an invitation or an announcement to a wedding does not mean buying a present. That is, it does not necessarily mean buying a present, as for instance, receiving an invitation to a party means acknowledging the invitation. It would be very easy if it did!—

Many people make a distinction between receiving an invitation to a wedding and an announcement to a wedding. That is, they maintain that an invitation demands a present, and an announcement does not. This is based on reason, in a way, for usually if we know the bride or groom very well, we receive an invitation to the wedding, and because of our friendship naturally would want to send a present. On the other hand, when we get just an announcement of a wedding to which invitations also have been issued, it indicates that we do not know the bride or groom very well, and therefore we would not be so apt to send a present.

As a matter of fact, if one is fond of the bride or groom, it is probable that one would wish to send a wedding present to the bride. The gift that one sends, large or small, depends on one's means.

The secret of a wedding present is he rich that the giver has to be represented in some way in the building of the new home. This spirit should be kept as high and fine as possible and each giver should help to preserve this spirit. The bride of good breeding and good taste would hate gifts that are made because guests who receive invitations think that the invitation "calls for" a gift.

(Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers)

Xmas Pudding Centuries Old

Some of Ingredients Put in Huge Pot by Queen Bess's Time

LONDON.—When the Prince of Wales and Mrs. Ernest Simpson, the fashionable Society of the Middle Temple in their kitchens, boil the 1930 Christmas pudding, some of the ingredients of which, tradition maintains were first put in the great mixing tub when Queen Elizabeth reigned.

This tub was in use on the night that Queen Elizabeth saw Shakespeare's "Twelfth Nights" performed in the hall in which it has not been cleaned out since.

The ingredients of the Christmas puddings for the remainder dinners are put in every year afresh, but since 1570 they have never been removed. They remain there, preserved by the rich brandy that pervades them, until next year's mixing.

So it is that raisins and sultanas carried to this country under the guns of merchant adventurers, may well have found their way on to the royal plate.

There are probably no dinners, so deeply steeped in tradition as those of the Middle Temple.

On the barristers' table is an ancient horn of snuff, which is passed around with great ceremony.

The guests are grouped into "messes" of four. Each mess has a captain, and a prize exists that they can keep three friends, to their mess, but on no account must one be a solicitor.

Indeed, a solicitor may never sit there, because to entertain a solicitor might be construed as "hugging an attorney."

Germans have invented a paper bowl that is claimed to be both lighter and stronger than wooden ones of the same size.

Halifax, April 10.—For the first time in history vessels of the Lunenburg salt fishing fleet have prosecuted the winter fresh fishing industry on a major scale. The experiment was watched with interest as the staunch auxiliary schooners sailed with surprising regularity into Halifax, Liverpool and Shelburne with other vessels landing at Lockeport and Yarmouth. As a result belief that fishing schooners were unable to land fares with any degree of regularity during the winter season has apparently gone by the boards and the Nova Scotia fishermen have proven that given a fair price for their landings, a regular supply of fresh fish can be obtained.

Fresh fish'ng from Halifax since the first of February five Lunenburg vessels, were in port together at the end of March covering their catches for month in the industry. Buffeted by a week of storms the fleet returned from the banks undamaged and hailed for a total of 228,000 pounds of salved fresh fish.

Most successful of all Nova Scotia fishing schooners the Harriet and Virgian skippered by Capta n William Devlin headed the list weighing out 88,000 pounds. Captain Deal has been successively high liner of the fleet during the past six years.

The log of the Harriet and Virgian shows that 378,000 pounds of fresh fish were hauled in 10 trips, the first being brought in on February 4. Five were landed in each month. None were more than seven days apart with the exceptions of the last, the vessel being out for nine days. "We were waiting for the fish dealers to broadcast to us to return as formerly," it was explained.

"Our catch would have been greatly increased if we were properly equipped for fresh fishing," Captain Deal continued. "The Harriet and Virginia carries only eight dories and is manned by a small fishing crew. We were doubtful that our venture would be a success. Otherwise we would have fished in a different way and would carry 11 dories. The other four vessels in port, the Brookes, Captain Thomas Himmelman, noted skipper of the ex-Nova Scotia champion Delawana; Ronald George, Captain Daniel Romkey; Auseps, Captain Peter Parks; and Marshal Frank, Captain Frank Risser; are similarly situated.

"There were 18 fine fishing days in February. March on the other hand was the stormiest month experienced during my 18 years as master of fishing schooners. During that month the Harriet and Virginia landed 270,000 pounds. In March, only a few thousand pounds less than the total of 396,000 pounds landed in February."

Eighteen of the Lunenburg fleet were at one time prepared to engage in the industry. On account of the glutted markets, the majority withdrew. Schooners Marshall Frank Harriet and Vivian, and Ronald George are fishing under a private agreement with Mitchell and McNeil, local fish dealers, controlled by the General Seafoods Corporation, of Gloucester.

Not without severe hardships and check'd research have the fish landings been brought to Nova Scotia's shores for consumption throughout Canada, so far west as Vancouver. Interwoven in the private entries of the logs of the vessels are tales of adventure and pure romance, such as:

Extraordinary endurance was shown by Walter Foote and Benjamin Schwartz when they clung to the bottom of an upturned dory for three-quarters of an hour in a heavy sea until rescued. The men were taken from the Marshall Frank on her last trip when their dory capsized after being struck by an "unlucky" sea. Both were at the point of exhaustion when picked up by fishermen in another dory.

Representing the first casualty of the year the Yarmouth vessel, Dorothy Grace, Captain William S. Murphy, returned last week with her bowsprite and part of her rigging following a collision with another vessel on the banks.

For ten unending to himself in the novie chair red an sed Wilyum I dropped in to see Claddie and the baby this afternoon and ecky Claddie is quite worried about the baby not having any name yet, and the more she thinks about various names the more undecided she becomes, because of course if you once give a child the wrong name you can very well change it without causing a lot of embarrassment, although I must admit I don't relish the thawt of our beloved parents grandparents of a name such as they finally decided upon.

Well, as I was I suggested one or two names, why not "Stella" the name of my favorite star? Or "Gloria" which is quite classical? Or "Irene" which is very popular? Or "Mary" which is the most beautiful name in the world, but Claddie she sed she didn't like any of them names, she wanted something different, but now that you mention it I think I like the name Stella very much indeed, Wilyum, what do you think about it? Well, if he can't say things nowadays like that of in one of his dirty books I don't know where he would make such a remark, I'm sure you can't say well chairs without causing a lot of embarrassment to his fellow things, me red, and I spoil Stella's fate for one thing their is no such name as Stella, I'm sure that they'd know all about him before they'd finished reading the book and I'm sure that they'd know all about him before they'd finished reading the book and I'm sure that they'd know all about him before they'd finished reading the book and
